Hampton Bays

You want to fight the Hamptons crowd at a grossly over-priced food shop with a lousy selection and valet parking? Or would you rather park free and easy half-way out there, waltz into a fabulous Fairway market filled with the stuff we've spoiled you on for years (at the price you want to pay), fill up the car and your weekend worries are over? Fairway Plainview is a half-mile south of the highways. A piece of cake. And then on the drive home you fall into Fairway Plainview again to stock up the apartment, pull up in front of your building, shlep the stuff up and another bothersome task is over with. For heaven's sake, Fairway sure makes life easier. Not to mention more enjoyable. Can you imagine life in New York without Fairway? Neither can we.

The Down Factory Store

www.downfactorystore.com

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"We go the distance for you."

Bigger Than Rennert

A Mansion Even Bigger Than The Rennert Home May Be Coming To Southampton

By Dan Rattiner

A Cincinnati industrialist is planning to build a summer home in the Hamptons that is even bigger than the home of Ira Rennert, which is currently under construction in Sagaponack. If it is approved, it will eclipse the Rennert home as the largest private residence ever built in America. And if it is completed before the Rennert home is, and the Rennert home has been under construction for four years and has a reported three more to go, then the Rennert project will at no time have been the largest private home in America, a title currently held by Bill Gates of Microsoft, whose house is built into a mountainside in Medina, Washington.

This title matters to a lot of people.

Roofing the east wing of the Rennert House, May 14, 2002

The name of the Cincinnati industrialist is, at this time, still a secret. But the name of the project is not, nor is the name of the architect, who has drawn up the plans for this home. The project is called Primrose. And the architect is Peter Allison, a man who is little known outside Cincinnati, but who has done many projects in that city, including the Cincinnati National Bank Building and the Cincinnati Playhouse, a project so successful that there is not a publication in Cincinnati that has not written about it.

We were unable to get an interview with Peter Allison on the Primrose Project; but we did meet with Allison's marketing and public relations manager, Ben Hanson, whose firm has a suite of offices in the Cincinnati National Bank Building in that town.

Dan's Papers: Please describe the Primrose Project.

Hanson: It is located, just as the Rennert House is located, on a beachfront property in Sagaponack, New York. Rennert's property is 56-oceanfront acres. Mr. Walter's project, oops, is on 71 oceanfront acres about a mile down the way. The Rennert residence now under construction is 106,000 square feet if you include all the different buildings on the property, the garage, the guard house, the beach house, the game room, the main house, the pool house and so forth and so on. There are 8 structures all together. For Primrose, there will be 9 structures, and the total of the square footage will be 121,400 square feet.

Dan's Papers: Any other comparisons?

Hanson: The Rennert residence has 29 bedrooms. Primrose will have 34 bedrooms. The Rennert

Southampton – Opening Summer 2002

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

Where the heck IS Paul McCartney going to marry Heather Mills this June? There have been numerous reports, from caterers and tent people and so forth, that it will be at the home of John Eastman, brother of Paul's late wife Linda in East Hampton. Now comes a report that everybody is going to be invited to Heathrow Airport without knowing where the wedding will be, at which time they will be whisked to a pre-selected spot in Ireland. Perhaps they will be whisked to what they think is Ireland but turns out to be East Hampton.

Stephen Johnides, the co-owner of the Old Stove Pub in Bridgehampton passed away two weeks ago at the age of 81. He will be dearly missed. His sister Coula Johnides, who ran the restaurant with him along with their late brother Gus, says the restaurant will continue and she hopes to market some of Stephen's recipes, for hot fudge (yum) and salad dressing (double yum). Stephen was a gentleman who retired to the restaurant business after a long career in Hollywood as a promoter for Warner Brothers.

Mick Jagger and the Rolling Stones are about to kick off another tour. The Stones, long ago, spent a summer in Montauk rehearsing and composing at Andy Warhol's compound on the beach there, One of the songs they wrote that summer was "Memory Motel," named after a motel with that name on Main Street – still there – and now very proud of that.

Cindy Adams, the columnist for the New York Post, lives in Bridgehampton but rarely writes of our area. New York is her beat. Nevertheless, last week, coming out of the Broadway Show The Goat, written by Montauk playwright Edward Albee, she overheard one theatergoer say the following to another. "Anyone so sick and twisted to want sex with an animal should at least do it with a horse. That way they have a ride home." It was worth reading her column last week for just that.

After thirty years, two sources say they know the identity of "Deep Throat," the government worker who tipped reporters Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein with information about Watergate that led, for the only time to the undoing of a sitting President, Richard Nixon. He is Mark Felt, who was, at the time, the number three man at the FBI And he is so named by lawyer John Dean, a major figure in the Watergate mess, and Ronald Kessler, who has just written a book entitled the history of the FBI. Felt is elderly and in failing health and has not confirmed any of this. As for Woodward and Bernstein, they are keeping to their pledge not to reveal the source until death do him or her part. Bernstein is a frequent visitor to the Hamptons. If you run into him at a fundraiser, raise an eyebrow and say "Felt?" Maybe he'll thump his hoof once for yes or twice for no.

So they can't do a full run of Sex and the City residence has indoor parking for 17 cars. Primrose will have indoor parking for 19 cars.The Rennert Project is to be completed in 2006. Primrose, using modern methods, should be ready for occupancy in 2005.

Dan's Papers: Why does anybody need 34 bedrooms? Or 29 bedrooms? There are people who are struggling to have even one bedroom.

Hanson: Mr. Rennert has many friends. The owner of Primrose has even more friends. Mr. Rennert's rolodex, some spies have told us, has 1,496 names in it. The rolodex of the owner of Primrose has 2,007 names in it.

Dan's Papers: People who have seen the plans for the Rennert residence say the kitchen has a grease trap capable of trapping 8,000 pounds.

Hanson: The Primrose grease trap can handle 9,000 pounds.

Dan's Papers: Can you give us any idea about the owner of the property. Mr. Rennert is the owner of several mining companies. He is active in charitable affairs. He has a wife and two children.

Hanson: All I can tell you is that the owner of Primrose is also an industrialist, but without all the environmental pollution violations that Mr. Rennert has accumulated. And where Mr. Rennert's industrial interests involve minerals, our client's interests are more animal and vegetable.

Dan's Papers: Anything else?

Hanson: You will like the owner of Primrose when we are finally able to reveal his name. I can tell you that. He's very likeable. I can also tell you that the owner of Primrose is short. I've been authorized to state that to people who inquire about his physical appearance. He is short.

Dan's Papers: Married?

Hanson: Short. I can't tell you about married.

Dan's Papers: Well short is something. It's going to be harder to get around a 126,400 square foot residence when you're short.

Hanson: I don't think that is any of your business.

Dan's Papers: Well, in a way it IS our business. It's everybody's business when somebody builds a residence this size. When the approvals were announced for the Rennert project four years ago, the community was outraged. Something that size is completely out of scale with the neighboring homes, which are all 2,500 square feet or 3,500 square feet at most. I think you know that Southampton Town passed a law after that. No future residence is to be larger than 20,000 square feet.

Hanson: We think that law is unconstitutional. A man's home is his castle. This is America. The more money you make, the bigger your castle. Nobody can stop you from doing that.

Dan's Papers: But there are zoning laws...

Hanson: Anyway, some people just need big houses.

Dan's Papers: Short people?

Hanson: It might have been better if I had not mentioned that detail.

Dan's Papers: There's a rumor that this new project is on a piece of vacant farmland exactly adjacent to the Rennert property. Indeed, there is a piece of farmland on the other side of Peter's Pond Lane, also oceanfront, which is exactly the same number of acres, 71, as Primrose. Could this be a proposal for that property?

Hanson: I am not at liberty to say whether it is that property or not.

Dan's Papers: There has been a proposal made for that property. It's on file at Southampton Town Hall. It shows a subdivision with five houses on it, and with 40 acres preserved for open space. I am looking at a set of plans on the wall behind you that seems to be for that very parcel, but, if I am looking at it correctly, with five underground

Sam's in East Hampton has remained unchanged for fifty years

1956 vs. 2002

One Man's View Of The Dramatic Changes Here In The Last Half Century

By Dan Rattiner

When people hear how long I have been publishing this newspaper, they invariably say the following:

"Boy, you must have seen a LOT of changes."

Well, yes and no. For one thing, there HAVE been a lot of changes. But for another, the changes have happened so gradually that one sort of doesn't notice them.

The other day, I was coming out of Bobby Van's in Bridgehampton and somebody asked me that, so on the way home, I thought about it. The best way to think about it, it seemed to me, was to imagine THEN, then not imagine anything in between, then imagine NOW. It worked.

> If there were a few hundred wealthy families in East Hampton, there were a few thousand of them in Southampton... but, like much of East Hampton, it was restricted.

Here is the comparison, from THEN, which was 1956 when I was 16-years-old, until now, which is, what the hell is it? 2002.

First of all, it is important to consider my perspective THEN. There is an old joke about a man who is born in Queens, moves to the East End when he is one-year-old, and then dies at the age of one hundred having lived all that time out here. The local paper headlines: QUEENS MAN DIES HERE.

Ultimately, I suppose, we are all interlopers. We come as Jewish immigrant merchant carpetbaggers in the 1860s, nearly a century and a half ago, and we are newcomers. We come as wealthy New York members of WASP society in the 1880s, still more than a century ago, and we are the summer people. From the point of view of the Shinnecock Indians, the first white men, the early settlers from England, the farmers and fishermen, were the newcomers. As a matter of fact, the Indians back then felt a need to welcome these people and help them out. They put out the welcome mat. Showed the white men how to build thatched huts over caves to get through that first winter. The harsh winters were something the English had never experienced before.

Anyway, my perspective is that, in 1956, when I was 16-years-old, my father moved our family out here from suburban New Jersey because he had bought a drug store in Montauk. Four years later I would start writing this newspaper, which I have written ever since. I was, my family was, well, interlopers. NEW JERSEY MAN DIES HERE.

In 1956, East Hampton was picture-book stunning. (It still is.) But there are many differences. It was a small town. The stores had names like Marley's Stationery, the East Hampton Five and Ten, Diamond's Furniture. There was an all-American soda shop on Newtown Lane, an Italian restaurant called Sam's, the East End Hardware Store. There was nothing chic at all about it. It was just an undiscovered, though sensationally beautiful, small town in 1956. Huge elm trees lined Main Street and Woods Lane (the Woods Lane trees are still there) and they overarched the road, making a leafy canopy of shade downtown. In the summertime, an enclave of about 200 rich families came out and lived in giant summer mansions behind hedgerows that afforded them great privacy. They played golf and went to their beach clubs. They supported Guild Hall and the John Drew Theatre. In September, they went home, their servants packing great steamer trunks aboard the Long Island Railroad train that got them back to the city in just two and a half hours.

Sag Harbor was a mess of broken-down homes and factories in 1956. There had been a whaling industry there in the nineteenth century and it had gone bust. There had been manufacturing plants there in the first half of the twentieth century and now they were going bust. There were still some blue collar workers who went off to the assembly lines in town that year, there was still a noon whistle and you still saw men in hardhats and overalls coming out of plants. But the town was in bad, bad shape. The mayor was trying to stop it, everybody was trying to stop it, but the big factories, Grumman, Bulova, Sag Harbor Industries, were slowing down and pulling out. Soon there would be virtually no work in that town. It wouldn't be until about 1970 that the well-to-do of New York City "discovered" Sag Harbor, bought up these falling-down houses bit by bit — many of them were whaler's homes — and fixed them up until they looked as beautiful as the day they were built.

If there were a few hundred wealthy New York families in East Hampton, there were a few thousand of them in Southampton. The estate section of that village was then (and is still) the largest wealthy area in the Hamptons but, like much of East Hampton, it was restricted. You had to be a member of "society," with your entry in the "Blue Book" to get in. Downtown there were lots of Manhattan stores with little boutique shops in Southampton. There was Abercrombie and Fitch, there was Elizabeth Arden. Saks Fifth Avenue was there then. A brokerage firm had an office at the corner of Meetinghouse Lane and Main Street in 1956.

In many ways, Southampton was still a firm bastion of classic old New York City society, as it was portrayed in the movie Titanic. The Irish were their servants and traveled third class. God knows who was down in steerage. Southampton was known nationally as "the Queen of America's Watering Holes," and that slogan was emblazoned proudly on the front cover of the Southampton Press. In other words, the rich drank. You'd find them at the bar at the Irving Hotel, at the bar at Herb McCarthy's, having steak at Ridgley's or, well, just drinking under a tent erected on someone's lawn for a daughter's coming out party. Of course, only certain people were allowed in, but you know what? They were known for their family, not their celebrity. That was Southampton.

There were other, smaller enclaves of rich summer people out here in the '50s, in Quogue, in Amagansett, in Westhampton Beach. These people had been coming here for years, attended by the Irish, or by local people who chose not to own a store or restaurant, run a farm, run a fishing boat or haul nets on the shore. The locals lived in North Sea or Noyack, in Springs and Bridgehampton and Sag Harbor.

Bridgehampton was a different matter entirely in 1956. The town, then, had developed as a farm hub, a place where the farmers gathered to buy equipment, seed, supplies or feed, and where wholesalers came to make arrangements for the moving of their wares. The farmers had been here in the Hamptons since the first settlers, but waves of additional farmers had come from Eastern Europe, especially from Poland, and had bought up some of the land. Bridgehampton, as a town, was one block long, with an Agway Store, a big bank, a meat market, an ice cream fountain, a grocery store, a clothing store, a propane gas

Judith Soltesz-Benetton

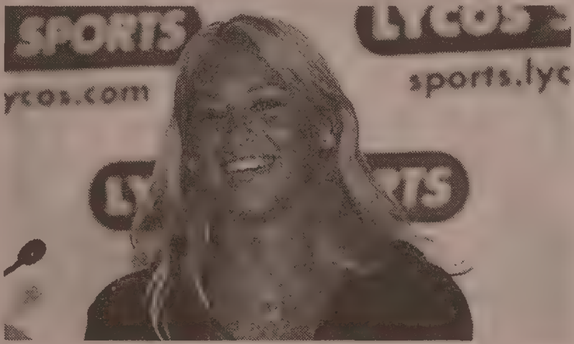
The Wrong Naked Lady

But Judith Soltesz-Benetton Really Does Look A Little Like Anna Kournikova

By Dan Rattiner

Penthouse magazine published the pictures of the wrong naked lady this month. Who they said it was, basking topless on the balcony of a Miami hotel room, was tennis star Anna Kournikova. Every guy who is a REAL guy wants to see Anna Kournikova topless, of course. And so copies of the magazine have been flying off the stands.

Now it turns out that the pictures may not be of Anna Kournikova but of the wife of the heir to the Benetton fortune. Her name is Judith Soltesz-Benetton and she is 28, has a two-year-old son named Primo, another on the way, and she was watching a syndicated TV show last week when the host held up a copy of the magazine with the appropriate parts pixilated, and noted that there are rumors that this is not Anna Kournikova at all and so it must be somebody else. Judith Soltesz-Benetton said to herself that the pictures were hard to see on the TV screen, but she had a bathing suit like that and the deck at the hotel looked familiar. She had indeed sunbathed on it and had taken her bikini top off.



Anna Kournikova

The next day, she sent a friend out to buy Penthouse and when she looked at it she knew it was her. Seven years ago, when she was twenty-years-old, she was on that hotel balcony, sunbathing. Apparently somebody with a long lens camera had photographed her without her knowledge. So how could this be Anna Kournikova? As a matter of fact, she thought, she had photographs that were taken on that particular trip showing her in that bathing suit at that hotel. She found them. The next day, her husband's lawyer filed a $10 million lawsuit against Penthouse.

In court in Manhattan on Tuesday, Judge Denny Chin sent an aide out to buy a Penthouse, looked at the topless pictures, the pictures that Judith Soltesz-Benetton let him see and announced that it was obvious to him that the pictures were of Soltesz- Benetton and not Kournikova. "I have it here in full color," he said, his voice trembling in full indignation. He demanded that Penthouse halt distribution of all 1.2 million copies of that month's magazine, ordered them to remove the offending photos from its website, and said that next week he will hold a hearing on whether Penthouse needs to recall all unsold issues.

I have two thoughts about this.

One is that this scandal — which will require a very good legal defense on the part of Penthouse, because Penthouse has fallen on very hard times — comes at a perfect moment for the Hamptons. Next week, Hamptonite Lizzie Grubman's legal problems get underway big time in a Suffolk County courtroom. Did she back into all those people at the Southampton disco last summer deliberately or accidentally? Was she drunk or was she sober? Did she curse at the employees before she did it or did they just make that up? Are the Hamptons just filled with obnoxious rich people who intend, both figuratively and literally, to just run roughshod over the locals? Now the spotlight will move out of the Hamptons and focus on partially naked rich people and a down-at-the-heels Manhattan-based magazine willing to do anything to make a buck.

The second thought I have had is that Penthouse, to save its skin — people say this lawsuit could drive them under — will have to mount a very vigorous legal defense.

Does Anna Kournikova have such a bathing suit, too? Magazines can do anything to doctor a picture these days and have, including putting movie stars' heads on much younger, more supple and more perfectly formed bodies (with permission, of course), airbrushing moles and wrinkles, even creating entire movie stars out of pure pixels. I have seen photos of movie star Aki Ross, a real looker indeed, who turns out not to exist. She's entirely computer generated. Exists on a disk.

Only way to really solve this is to get Anna Kournikova into the courtroom and have a closer look. Kournikova says she is going to sue, too? All the better. Get 'em in here side by side and have them strip down. We'll see whether either of them is who was in those pictures.

We'll have Johnnie Cochran for the defense. If the bikini don't fit, he'll say, then you can't convict. I'll buy that. ●

Important Safety Tip To Remember Before Going Into The Operating Room

By Dan Rattiner

Ever had a surgeon cut off your left arm when it was supposed to be your right? I haven't. You probably haven't, either. But according to an article in The New York Times not long ago, it can happen. And there are things you can do to prevent it, such as marking the site. There are also things that doctors can do to prevent it, but they aren't.

"Patients are urged to mark, not only the site that is to be operated on, but also the one that should NOT be operated on," wrote the author of the article, Dr. Lawrence Altman, M.D.

Didn't think of that, did you?

Dr. Altman interviewed a Dr. Dennis O'Leary, president of the Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organization.

"We have had two cases where the correct limb was marked but the wrong one was not," Dr. O'Leary said, "and, of course, the surgeon never went to the right limb so operated on the wrong one."

REALLY didn't think of that, did you?

Another thing you can do is stay awake during the surgery. Although, as Dr. Altman points out, "Many patients are not thrilled about staying awake on the operating table." Also, as Dr. Altman points out, only "some" potential mistakes can be prevented by the patient. Well.

> "Patients are urged to mark, not only the site that is to be operated on, but also the site that should NOT be operated on..."

No, I'm PRETTY SURE it's my left arm. Yeah. That's it.

Mistakes sometimes happen, according to the article, because X-rays and scans are placed on the viewing boxes in the operating room backwards. I don't know about you, but the really GOOD doctors I go to just take 'em out of the sleeve and slap them up on the viewing box bang, bang, bang. They are the Barry Bondses of the Home Run derby and they know it.

"Right now, we're dealing with the problem of retraining surgeons who were taught to believe they were the center of the universe, and they're not," Dr. O'Leary, the CAHO president said.

Oh yes they are.

Dr. Altman, in writing this article, also interviewed Dr. S. Terry Canale, who is a representative of the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons. Dr. Canale told him that in the course of a surgeon's career, there is a 25% chance of performing wrong-site surgery at least once.

If we came with a total of eight arms and legs would the risk be 12 1/2%?

"Although the patient did not suffer any adverse effects from the surgery, beyond a hole on the wrong side of his skull, there was potential for severe neurological deficit or even death," Dr. Altman wrote.

X Marks

Dr. Altman wrote about SEVERAL very gruesome mistakes like this, but I'm not going to tell you about them. I will spare you the details of the case of Donald Church, in whom the doctors at the University of Washington Medical Center left a 13-inch metal retractor and, after he complained about it, told him those were natural pains after surgery and then four months later, during a routine follow-up CAT scan, there it was. They called Dr. David Byrd, who had left it there, but who was on vacation. He DID, however, take the time to call back to say he would remove it just as soon as he got home.

You don't need to hear this stuff.

What is needed is a checklist, according to Dr. Altman, who tried to end this article on a positive note.

"The new focus on preventing medical errors," wrote Dr. Altman, "stresses the need to train doctors, nurses and other health professionals in the importance of teamwork and systems management. Experts liken the approach to the checklist that pilots go through before takeoff.

"These measures are not taught in medical school or residency training, and professors may resist adding them to the curriculum."

So I am going in next week for a routine colonoscopy. I'm supposed to have this done every three years. Everybody should have this done every three years. And I plan to mark the site with a magic marker, though I may have to get a friend to mark the site for me. Are you free?

Question: If I mark THIS site, what is the site I should mark where I don't want them to go? ●

Time Travel And Other Experiments Deep In The Woods Of Montauk

By Dan Rattiner

About ten years ago, a 150 page paperback book called THE MONTAUK PROJECT was published. I was mentioned in it. And so, as these things go — I thought I ought to read it. Had I been slandered? Held up as a paragon of virtue? Given just a bit part? The third of these things turned out to be true. The book, laying out an outlandish plot involving government experiments in the woods of Montauk, described how, as a result of these experiments, thousands of animals came out of the woods and stampeded through downtown Montauk that August. The occasion of this occurrence was mentioned in the weekly edition of the newspaper I publish in Montauk. It named the year.

There are certain people in the world who can't remember to take out an umbrella when it rains, but who can remember the most minute details from early on in their lives. I am one of these people. Since the book declared itself as non-fiction and put forth the incredible events it described as fact, I was moved to send the writers a letter. I could guarantee them I was in Montauk during the month of August in question and that no such stampede ever took place.

Several years later, a sequel to THE MONTAUK PROJECT was published. It was called MONTAUK PROJECT 2, and I was in it again, this time with a slightly more prominent role. They mentioned my letter, and described it as further proof of a coverup among the authorities. Apparently, I was an authority. You couldn't win.

THE MONTAUK PROJECT, though never making any best seller lists, became a cult classic and, in Montauk at least, continues to sell briskly. It also sells well nationwide among people who believe we live amidst a tangled web of government coverups. The Kennedy Assassination cover-up for example. Or the aliens who met up with the state troopers in Lubbock, Texas, after crash landing in a field nearby to that town.

> The thing is, there is a great deal strange about the woods in Montauk where the authors... set their tale. People who walked through... have told strange tales.

The thing is, there is a great deal strange about the woods in Montauk where the authors of THE MONTAUK PROJECT set their tale. People who walked through it during the 1980s and 1990s have told strange tales. All can be explained, however, even the so-called experiments with time travel, which the authors of the book say took place there during the 1940s before going terribly awry, culminating in the deaths of the entire crew of a World War II destroyer. The scientists in Montauk were sending this destroyer back through time from Philadelphia to Montauk. But more about this later.

It was in 1942 that an Army base was built deep in the woods of Montauk, along the Atlantic coast. They built it three miles to the west of the Montauk Lighthouse, sheltered under some tall trees. A Nazi military landing was a distinct possibility in those days. Bunkers were built, anti-aircraft guns put in place, and two huge 16 inch shore batteries built into the cliff face to sink any German pocket battleships that might come too close. Telephone lines extended over the barbed wire surrounding this facility and connected the soldiers there with the newly built military airport in Westhampton. If necessary, fighter planes could be scrambled from Westhampton, go out over the Atlantic and deal with whatever had to be dealt with.

One of the most unique things about this Army

base was the attempt made by the builders of the base, to keep it safe from German bombers. The barracks buildings and officers' quarters were built around a "town green" and the steeples on the roofs of the buildings put one in mind of churches and village halls. Surely this was just a peaceful fishing village.

When the war ended — without a German invasion, the soldiers at Camp Hero, as it was known, were mustered out of the service and sent home to the victory parades all through America. The camp was abandoned and soon went to ruin.

Around 1950, however, America felt threatened again, this time by the communists in the Soviet Union. The Russians had the bomb. There was nothing, it seemed, that could prevent them from sending planes over America and dropping atomic bombs on our big cities. Unless, of course, we were to build early warning systems.

By 1958, the United States had built one such facility at Montauk, again in the woods, this time just adjacent to the abandoned Camp Hero. The new facility had a huge radar tower made of concrete rising almost ten stories into the sky. It is there today. And it was run by men working on computers, very primitive and very large computers that took up the insides of giant four story buildings surrounding the radar tower. This early warning facility, run by the Air Force and called the 773rd Squadron, was, just like Camp Hero before it, surrounded by barbed wire and entered only at a gatehouse manned by armed guards. You needed a good reason to go into the 773rd.

Around 1975, however, technology had advanced so much that the 773rd was closed, the skies around the United States now guarded by satellites hooked up to an underground SAC headquarters in North Dakota. And so the 773rd, abandoned, also fell into ruin.

Then, around 1990, some suspicious and skeptical writers snuck in over the chain link fence at the 773rd/Camp Hero site, much as many of the kids of Montauk had been doing for fifteen years prior to that time, to look at the wondrous ruin of what had gone on there before. A decade earlier, I had done this. With John Keeshan, now a Montauk realtor, I climbed up to the top of the inside of the radar tower, marveling at all the broken gauges and vacuum tubes and wiring, explored some of the surrounding buildings and watched — I am afraid of heights — as John climbed to the top of the facility's watch tower, still standing, to see how good the view was. It was very good indeed, he shouted down to me.

A secret government project to create time travel? Could be. In many ways, the book pre-dated the movie THE BLAIR WITCH PROJECT, a horror film that came out a few years ago and grossed about a hundred million dollars.

The book described the facility in the woods in Montauk with considerable accuracy. What were those switches and electromagnetic power generators all about anyway? Wires hung from the rusty ceilings of some of the rooms. At one windowless facility, huge concrete barriers had been erected just outside the entrance, either to diffuse a blast from the outside trying to get in or to diffuse a blast from the inside trying to get out. And inside, there were doors in the floor you could open to go down into an extensive underground tunnel system.

Also, some of the facility's doors worked only by combination locks or twin keys working together — and why was there all this secrecy? The book describes one of the many well known mysteries of World War II, some of which were the cause of the fire that sank the cruise ship Normandie in New York Harbor and the loss of an entire destroyer that disappeared one night from its dock in Philadelphia.

The authors weave their tale around the disappearance of this destroyer. What they suggest is that scientists working in these top secret facilities in Montauk had put together a way to disassemble and reassemble molecules from one place to another. The destroyer, with all its crew, proved that what the scientists had developed didn't work. An attempt to beam the destroyer was made. And everybody aboard it died. After that, THE MONTAUK PROJECT was abandoned, everything left just as it was on that fateful day, to rot and rust forever.

In fact, with the recent release of documents from that tense era, it turns out there WAS something secret going on in Montauk and the government never wanted the public to know.

It has turned out that at the five well-known Nike missile sites on Long Island, at Westhampton, Rocky Point, Farmingdale, Oyster Bay and Hart Island, from 1957 to 1973, the missiles were tipped with nuclear warheads able to explode with three times the firepower of the A-Bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki in 1945. The missiles had a range of about 250 miles and there were more than 50 of them on a hair-trigger at all times, with air force officers in the windowless, dimly lit rooms surrounding the radar tower at Montauk staring at green computer screens and feeding information to missile control at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey.

The big guns in the cliffs at Montauk were never fired in anger, although the people of Montauk lived through deafening test firings. The guns would roar in a thunderous blast heard all over town and the windows would shake and the dishes in the cabinets of people's homes would rattle. The last test firings took place around 1960.

As for the huge radar dish, it would make a full revolution every 28 seconds, and every 28 seconds, if you had a radio or stereo on, you'd hear a brief buzzing sound as the beam from the radar tower passed by. Did anybody at the time think this sound was in some way bad for your health? This was before the environmental movement in America. People thought it was just something you had to put up with if you wanted to be safe from the Communists.

Use Your Computer To Search For ET — Saddam Hussein Does

By Jerry Cimisi

How would you like to use your computer to receive messages from extraterrestrial life forms? Seriously. This may sound like an ad in the back of a comic book, but the SETI program, which has been in existence for forty years, is looking for a few good computers (several million actually) to link into a huge super-computer data crunching network — during each computer's spare time, of course.

Thus has been born SETI@home.

SETI stands for Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence. The program was started by a number of fervent scientific types and based on the assumption that if there is intelligent life out there it will be trying to contact other intelligent life. Since the early 1960s powerful radio telescopes have been scanning the heavens for electromagnetic signals that have not been cast across the cosmos by nature but by life forms that want to say, "Hello." SETI is currently run out of the University of California at Berkeley.

> A twenty-year-old Portuguese student now in Afghanistan says, "I love anything related to computers." And then adds, "I hope to find a female E.T."

But it's not as if some researcher somewhere will be wearily watching a stream of bits, an endless stream of zeroes and ones and suddenly come across an abruptly recognizable message or, rather, something unrecognizable that is obviously a message. No, it's all more difficult and tedious than that. SETI hopes that somewhere in the million, nay, billions of bits of data it processes, say, from the huge radio telescope at Arecibo, Puerto Rico, there will be a stream of information that is clearly artificial. Whether it's the equivalent of the I Love Lucy show (which many astronomers joke is now reaching the nearer star systems) or ordinary code for mathematical formulae, doesn't matter.

In other words, artificial data does not just jump out at you. It has to be analyzed. Sifted through. That is where your computer comes in. If you hook up with SETI@home, a portion (I stress portion) of this precious data will be downloaded into your computer via a screen saver SETI gives you. To be more precise, SETI will send you — rather, your computer — about 25 megabytes of info at a time. The screen saver works over the data and sends the results back to SETI.

Over the next two years the entire sky will be scanned three full times from Arecibo. Look up at the stars on a clear night. You will see a few thousand suns. But you cannot see the billions and billions (as Carl Sagan used to put it) of suns beyond the range of human vision. Suns that might bear planets that might bear life — that might be sending signals to us.

When the SETI screen saver finishes analyzing its data, it is sent back to Berkeley and new data is sent. SETI gives you the option of having this done automatically or at a time of your choosing. Transmission time is about five minutes.

As might be expected, those who have enlisted their computers in the search for extraterrestrials are a varied lot — though sharing the common belief that this search is of overriding importance. The SETI web site provides a host of user profiles.

Milada, a nineteen-year-old girl from the Czech Republic declares, "I hope the ETs are better than we are, because if they behave as we do, then it's bad for us."

Fabia Alredo Borghi from Argentina says, "I wait for twenty years when we can receive notices from

Hi

the cosmos." As for his hobbies, he adds, "I like to play basquetball" (that's how he spells it) and "read science fiction books."

In the U.S., a man who calls himself "anchor," and lists himself as "Resident of Earth," describes himself as a "Navy retiree who spent any number of years on the midwatch (mignight to 4 a.m.) looking at the stars and wondering."

I looked for users from some of the countries that are now locked in the most immediate and dangerous circumstances — that is, the Middle East. What could keep a few individuals there looking toward the stars while the lives of the earthbound are so immediately threatened?

From the Gaza Strip, Taher Shihadeh says, "It would be shameful for us as a species if it resulted that there was somebody trying to get in touch and we didn't even bother listening."

A twenty-year-old Portuguese student now in Afghanistan says, "I love anything related to computers." And then adds, "I hope to find a female ET."

In Pakistan, Muhammad Ali Saeed writes, somewhat cryptically, "I do believe life exists, but it may not be where we are trying to find it. It may be closer to us than we know it."

And then, from Iraq, possibly the next battleground in the War on Terror, there is Saddam Hussein. At least someone claiming to be Saddam. I doubt SETI sent someone over there to check it out. Saddam says: "All I can tell you is this — if I can fight the U.S., I can damn well fight those aliens!" More soberly, Saddam adds, "I think that when we discover ET life, it will be a major milestone and I want to be part of it."

(So it's a year or so from now and American Special Forces bring back this computer from Iraq and Secretary of Defense Rumsfel has a press conference and is saying, "You can see we were suspicious right off with this strange screen saver.")

At any rate, just what happens if you think your computer has discovered some interesting signals? SETI@home participant John Jaksich from Sacramento notes, "After a casual observation of data shows some sinusoidal and other types of curvature in the data streams presented it would be foolish not to investigate further the nature of these seeming anomalies."

Well, SETI says that any data that seems to stand out among the usual cosmic and earthly noise will indeed undergo further analysis. But apparently 99.9999 percent of "manmade" signals your computer will detect are just that: manmade, or RFI (Radio-Frequency Interference) — in other words, a talk show from Buffalo.

The remaining 0.0001 percent will be checked against other observations against the same area of the sky. If the signal still cannot be discounted as RFI, another team of computers and radio telescopes will review the source.

If, after all this the source seems to be interstellar, SETI will make an announcement via an International Astronomical Union telegram. This is the common method of announcing astronomical discoveries. SETI stresses it is important that an individual participating in SETI@home not go off and make statements to the media about a possible ET contact without all the above checking and rechecking.

If the international scientific community does agree that there is an "intelligent" signal out there, what then? There is actually an international protocol that was first drawn up decades ago: "Declaration of Principles Concerning Activities Following the Detection of Extraterrestrial Intelligence." There are the expected declarations that all information concerning the signal(s) should be made public and that all international parties should agree not to name the signal.

Most importantly, "No response to a signal should be sent until appropriate international consultations have taken place."

There's the rub: if a signal is finally found, what do we say? "Free Palestine?" "Re-elect Pataki?" Or, if Saddam has his way, "Give me back Kuwait?"●

Who's Here:

Peter de Sève

Illustrator

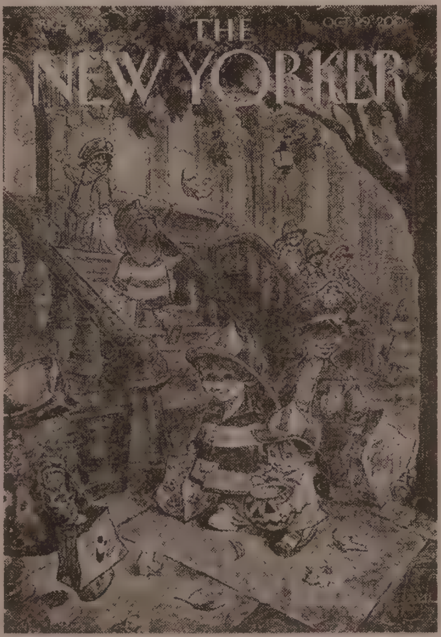
By Nicholas de Sève

"Character design in animated films is still, weirdly, the forgotten child of the whole process. To ignore it is to miss the point – that the most seminal and creative acts still occur on paper."— Illustrator, Peter de Sève

My family has a deep and abiding connection to the East End. After our dad, a NYC schoolteacher, died in 1970, my mother bought a tiny two-room cottage nestled deep in the woods off of Three Mile Harbor Road. This was her estate, and her love of East Hampton and its singular pleasures was passed on to her children. My wife and I built a house up in Springs in '89, two of my siblings live and work here year round with their families, and the other three, including the illustrator Peter de Sève, spend weekends at the cottage with their children as often as possible.

Peter and I got together at our mother's place recently, and passed a lazy early spring afternoon discussing his career in general and the hit movie, Ice Age, in particular. Presently doing boffo business since its release in March, the Blue Sky Studios production features the latest technology in computer generated (CG) animation but still remains faithful to the ageless rules of storytelling narrative: spin an epic tale in a wondrous setting inhabited by memorable characters. Children love the flick for the roadrunner antics of a rodent-like creature named Scrat; the buddy movie camaraderie between Sid, a not-so-dopey sloth, and Manny, a droll mammoth; and the subtle menace of the saber-tooth, Diego. Mom and Dad appreciate the kids appreciating all of the above, but they're also tickled by the film's wry undercurrent of in-jokes and pop culture allusions.

All of these creations owe their existence to de Sève's fertile imagination and estimable talent as an illustrator and humorist.



Sprawled across an easy chair in the cottage's cozy living room, my kid brother looks considerably younger than his forty-three years. An avid runner and former marathoner, his six-foot plus frame is slim and almost gangly in a loose-knit sort of way. Objectively speaking (although I hate to admit it here), he is good looking; a full head of brown locks, smart-aleck blue eyes over prominent cheekbones and his lucky symmetrical nose attest to the Brit-Nordic input of past generations. His speech betrays little of the native New York roots that occasionally mark mine, and his smooth baritone delivery in the service of a very quick wit is part rapid fire Alan Alda, part goofy Steve Martin.

Darla, the world's gentlest pit bull, lies contentedly snoozing in Pete's lap as we careen down a shared memory lane starting with his noisy childhood among five siblings in a rambling drafty barn of a house in Great Neck.

It seems as if you've always been an artist. What were the earliest influences on your becoming one?

"I don't know what started me, actually. I suppose the quick answer would be comic books illustrations, science fiction and fantasy books. I do remember vividly drawing Superman with his X-ray vision for this kid, Tommy Burns, in the third grade. I just doodled a lot back then; I think that I was always inclined, somehow, to draw from a very early age."

I remember your infatuation with all sorts of pets: baby alligators, foul-mouthed parrots, lizards and a snake or two.

"Well, I didn't know then, of course, that what I was doing was what I would be. I was obsessed with animals as a child, and I thought that that was my big calling. I wanted to be a zoologist because they got to be with animals and that interested me a lot. I always had something running around the basement in Great Neck. Downstairs always had this unique odor in our house, if you recall."

I do... thanks a lot by the way. You were very big on dinosaurs as well.

"There are things that come up now, that I draw, which show such an unwavering trajectory from when I was a kid that it's almost embarrassing."

You were always pretty weird, even your earliest stuff had this twisted-gene sense of humor to it, far beyond a normal child's sensibility.

"Well, gee, thanks... The earliest drawing of mine that I could find is very crude. I dug it up recently, it's sequential: it's two drawings, the first panel is a picture of a cliff with a car going over it, the second has a ring of shark fins in the ocean below circling a hat floating on the surface. When I think about the stuff that I drew when I was a kid, it was so strange and morbid — Mom and Dad must have been so concerned! Remember in Peanuts for example, Snoopy's "happy dance?" Well I drew that, pretty well as a matter of fact, but in the background behind the capering beagle, Charley Brown is hanging by his neck from a tree limb with a half-dozen knives in him."

How old were you when you did that?

"Oh, eighteen... I was probably ten years old. My youth was really a series of weird obsessions. After animals, it became comic books; I'd ask every adult visitor to the house if they had comics when they were kids, what kind, why did their parents throw them out. Especially the fabulous comics of the 50s like the EC books. Did you remember that I wanted to be an actor in horror films? You know like Peter Lorre, Boris Karloff, all of those Universal horror film icons. And all of these obsessions, the comics, animals and the movies, they're all intertwined in my work."

Pretty rich fantasy life for a kid, don't you think?

"Well, that brings up a pretty good point, because being the youngest of six in a loving but tumultuous household, the basement was probably a great place to get away from it all. The basement and the inside of my skull."

Did they amount to your first art studios?

"Definitely and then the attic when you were kind enough to finally leave the house."

How did Mom and Dad take to this fantasy world? Was there ever any major disagreement as to the direction you were going scholastically?

"I don't remember Dad's perspective too much; he died when I was only eleven, but Mom was always really supportive. I'll never forget her taking me to my first "Life Drawing" class at the Art Students' League in the city, and her cornering the instructor, this tall, eagle-faced and deadly serious man who thought he was Beethoven, and here's Mom talking to this imposing figure just towering over her about her teenage son, who was clearly the youngest student in the class and anxiously asking him (Peter mimics, perfectly, her soft English accent): 'You're not going to change his style are you?' And I remember that it was so sweet that she was so protective of me, because she was generally so shy, but she stood up to this authority figure, for her son, who just at this time was actually very absorbed in the naked woman who sat on a podium in the front of the classroom."

Is it true that you've never held a real job in your life?

"Well, it's nice of you to put it that way, but completely untrue."

You had specific role models as a student. Who were they and what attracted you to their styles?

"There were three young guys back then: Jeff Jones, Bernie Wrightson and Mike Kaluta. They were in comics during the seventies, which was the high point of comics' illustration of superheroes; you know Captain America, Spiderman and the Fantastic Four. These guys were doing their own thing under the guidelines of the genre, but they were drawing from periods of art that were pretty atypical in comics. They were doing pre-Raphaelite stuff, Art Deco and the Romantic eras, other periods that were heavy on costume, atmosphere and history that you didn't really expect to see in comics. The visual imagery was just compelling, something in their work clicked for me completely."

Your work seems to be heavily informed by fairy tales and mythology as well.

"I got the influences second hand through the guys I just mentioned. When I realized that they were in turn getting theirs second hand, I discovered this whole wealth of information on the history of illustration and began to draw from it as a source for my own style."

Was there any one illustrator in particular who influenced you?

"Yes, Arthur Rackman, a great nineteenth-century illustrator, I found myself drawn to his stuff — whether it was actually part of me, or I thought it was part of me — because of the whole Anglo thing, because Mom and her roots were a part of us. There were also scores of books in the house in Great Neck, old books that belonged to our Scottish great-grandfather, with fantastic illustrations that I would just pore over for hours. I remember in particular, an original edition of a slim little volume written by Lewis Carroll and illustrated by A.B. Frost. They were dark and gothic, but they were funny, too. It was a perfect sort of combination for me and I still use that book as a sort of touchstone."

Humor has always been an integral part of your personality, and it's always been evident in your work. No matter how elaborate and formal the composition there is always a hint of mischief or sly fun somewhere. Why?

"Well, that was clearly because it was the tone in the house. Thanks to you, I have to confess: You pretty much dictated the style of humor, which was caustic, but clever, and I'm sure that's the way it works in most families — you learn what's really funny by the reactions you get from siblings."

(Our mother passed away in '95 after a courageous fight against AML. She insisted that just being out here, instead of in a hospital, gave her a new lease on life — an extra month or so for every week she could be in East Hampton.)

"To this day I can't go to the ocean without thinking of her, but especially the beaches in East Hampton. You know after she died, it took me a long time to be able to come out here at all, especially to this cottage. For me, she is always a part of the place, inseparable in my mind. It's a bittersweet feeling."

Peter has earned a steady living at his craft since college, picking up commissions to design greeting cards and cartoons for small magazines while still a teenager.

"Well, yeah, mostly black and white because — I'm colorblind! Which means mine's a very colorful world but certain shades of red and green, earth tones, subtle hues throw me. It's less of a problem than I thought it was for many years, but it used to be terrifying for me to work with color. I did a remarkably small amount of color work when I was a student. I don't know how I got away with it."

Peter's reputation grew steadily as his illustrations began appearing on the inside of publications like The NY Times, Newsweek, Atlantic Monthly, Forbes, Time and Premiere. Covers soon followed, along with marquee posters for the Broadway productions of A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum and Noises Off. His big breakthrough came in 1993, however, with the publication of his initial New Yorker cover. It would be the first of twenty to date.

"It's the only magazine where the cover is completely generated by artist to viewer without the intrusion of type listing the contents of the issue. The drawings live and die on their own merit. It remains a great showcase for artists."

Eventually, Pete's work began to catch the eye of the major Hollywood studios. He was commissioned to design characters for 2-D animated films

The Sheltered Islander

By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander # 200

Wow! Two hundred columns in four years... whoda thunk it? I've been through five editors, four house moves and one Rattiner. Pretty good I'd say. And, by a strange co-inkydink, my first column came out the second week of May, 1998.

I told Dan he could pick his favorite column and re-run it for my 200th Column Spectacular, but he was so overwhelmed with favorites, he couldn't single out just one. Naturally I felt guilty when I heard he cancelled the parties just to sit home and contemplate his choices. Went without food and water for two days I heard. He was so upset he remembered to remove his hat in bed. I felt terrible. So, to save the sanity of one who is responsible for driving so many others insane, I opted to choose one of my friend's favorite columns.

Observations of a New Islander #42 (from 1999)

M.I.T.s

Three articles ago I shared this New Year's resolution, "I resolve not to be intimidated into driving faster than prudent by MITs."

MITs are Men In Trucks, they must go fast. They must be there ahead of you. There's nowhere to rush to on Shelter Island, but by G-d, they have to get where you're not going ahead of you. MITs must go fast or their private parts will fall off.

There is a highly defined pecker order for MITs in trucks eight years and older. New truck MITs are in a different category. New trucks are driven by rich men and wannabes. They can't measure up to the classic MITs.

First, you have your lowest level MITs, Level #1. These men drive an ordinary old pick-up truck. It must be at least eight years old and have no dogs, no trailer hitch and an uncracked windshield.

Level #2 MITs have an eight-year or older truck with a toolbox, trailer hitch and one dog in the back of an undetermined breed. They've used duct tape to repair the driver's seat.

Level #3 MITs have a ten-year old truck, the tool box has a broken lock, two dings in windshield, a trailer hitch and one Labrador in the back. Level #3 MITs know how to make dashboard pizza. This is when you bring last night's cold pizza to work with you and leave it on the dashboard to warm in the sun and be ready by lunch. They hate MIMs (Moms In Minivans). They hunt them and get behind them just so they can see if they can make them drive faster.

Level #4 MITs have all of the above qualifying features plus have now used up an entire roll of duct tape on car seat repair. Level #4's are towing a small trailer containing a lawn mover and several large green trash barrels. They can identify every man on the Island by the vehicle he drives.

Level #5 MITs have all of the above plus two black Labs and fishing poles in the back. The driver must wear sunglasses repaired with black electrical tape. Level #5 MITs know exactly where to park at the job site to get the maximum amount of sun needed to cook dashboard lasagna, manicotti, warm blueberry muffins and keep coffee hot. The truck is dented but the dents have not rusted.

Level #6 MITs have all of the above features and two full Gatorade bottles that do not contain Gatorade rolling around the floor on the passenger side. The driver's side door can only be opened by reaching through the window and lifting the handle from the outside. The dents on the side of the truck have rusted into a mottled textured look. Level #6 MITs can be identified as they pass by the rust patterns the dents have now created, like spots on a leopard. From Level #6 and up, only the driver knows all the tricks required to drive this truck.

Level #7 MITs. Much like the Level #6's except that the driver hasn't even bothered to take the keys out of the ignition in over two years. There is now a small ragged back support cushion in the concave depression that was formerly known as the seatback. Level #7 MITs can not only cook on the dashboard, they can cook on the manifold. This is the Clint Eastwood level of cool MIT. When Level #7 MITs pull over and raise their hoods, they're just turning over the burritos...

Level #8 MITs are Level #7's that either have a salvaged door of a different color, or a plywood tailgate, or any other type of repair that involves permanently affixing plywood to the vehicle. It is the Steven Segal level of MIT cool; they shape the plywood with their bare hands. At this age and level there is an everpresent bottle of Advil in the glove compartment.

Level #9 MIT's can be identified by the sound

The undisputed champ of fundraisers in the New York area was the one held last week for Mount Sinai Hospital at that institution's Guggenheim Pavilion. How does $5.5 million sound? Thanks to the David Yurmans, the Ronald Lauders, the Carl Ichans, the Robert Rubins and a host of others, many with Hampton addresses.

Among the many people in the film business with Hampton connections at the Tribeca Film Festival last week were Jerry Seinfeld, Nora Ephron, Arthur Miller, Sidney Lumet and, of course, Robert De Niro.

New York Times reporter Douglas Heingartner called our publisher Dan Rattiner for an interview about the upcoming summer in the Hamptons. Why was the place so busy this spring? Rattiner told him a lot had to do with work now acceptably being done in a play environment. Rattiner said he was on a cell phone at the beach, interrupted in the middle of writing a story for Dan's Papers. Heingartner said he was on his cell phone at an ourdoor café in Little Italy taking notes for his story. There you go.

A fundraiser was held last week for Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle at the Manhattan home of Ambassador Carl Spielvogel and Barbarlee Diamonstein, also of Southampton . Among Hamptonites attending were Carl Ichan, Leonard Lauder, Bobby Short and a host of others.

and CG productions for Fox, Disney, DreamWorks and Pixar in movies like The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Mulan, The Prince of Egypt, Tarzan, and, most notably, Kevin Spacey's menacing grasshopper character in A Bug's Life. Still, he felt that his role was one of being just another supplier of ideas to the processing maws of the studios, with little or no say in the creative direction of their movies.

Two years ago the call came in from a little-known CG animation house in Westchester: Blue Sky Studio. They were beginning pre-production on Ice Age, the first major CG feature emanating from the East Coast. He started researching his characters during sketching visits to the Museum of Natural History: "I made a point of not creating any character completely from Scrat... I mean, scratch. I wanted a paleontologist to be able to go to this movie and recognize any of the characters as possibly existing during the Pleistocene Age."

His role in the production began expanding far beyond the norm for the typical character designer.

"The studio was being very receptive to everything that I was submitting and including me in many of the production conversations, and for once, paying a lot of attention to the character designer! I could actually help guide the evolution of characters beyond just the drawings. I became very friendly with the modelers, director and computer animators. It was almost more fun than work."

The evolution from initial sketch to finished computerized character is a painstaking but fascinating process. After getting the go-ahead from the director, Chris Wedge, Peter's character sketches were transformed into clay sculptures by Blue Sky's modelers. A latticework was drawn on the sculpture to create the 3-D shape of each character. Next, a stylus attached to a software program traces the sculpture's latticework to create a virtual "wire frame" three-dimensional drawing. The drawing is then given a "skin" with the pressing of a button in the program. "The modelers were extremely receptive to my supervising, with Wedge's approval, the changes in the design. A further difference was the fact that I was the only designer working on the film, instead of a handful of designers. I had the field to myself — a very rare occurrence for a character designer."

Two years ago, Peter and his lovely wife, Randall, which sits Camp Hero and the 773rd Squadron passed to the New York State Parks Department. As you read this, the parks department is in the middle of a three year cleanup which involves removing broken equipment, tearing down dilapidated buildings, scouring the landscape for explosives and other toxic materials, even climbing down the cliff face looking for shrapnel and gunpowder from the spent shells of the sixteen inch guns fired so many years ago.

The plan, once the place is cleaned up, is to turn this woods into a limited use park and war memorial. The ten story radar tower is to be restored. Recently it was added to the New York State Historic Register (!), tours are to be led through it, there will be walks through the woods to the anti-aircraft gun sites, to the underground ammunition tunnels and the machine gun bunkers.

The concrete walls outside the entrances to the windowless room? If the missiles were ever fired in anger at incoming Soviet bombers, the Montauk control center would be a prime target for the Soviets. The concrete walls were there to keep an explosion, perhaps a nuclear explosion, out. And the doors leading down to the tunnels inside were for military survival in such an instance.

On the other hand, maybe there is an old destroyer in the woods up from Philadelphia somewhere. If it's there, they'll find it. And then we'll have a whole other story. ● tunnels arrayed like the spokes of a wheel, connecting up to a sixth above-ground structure in the center that is sort of a hub. Could that be the Primrose project?

Hanson: Let me tell you a story. Two stories. One is that Peter Allison is a very revolutionary architect. Have you seen the Cincinnati Playhouse?

Dan's Papers: No.

Hanson: The audience sits in one building. Then there is a glass tube that extends out when theater is in session that connects the audience to the stage building. Get it?

Dan's Papers: So that is how Primrose will get around the 20,000-square foot per residence restriction?

Hanson: Here's the second story. A very well-known story in architectural circles. In New York City in the late 1920s, the largest skyscraper was the Woolworth Tower on Wall Street, which was 55 stories high. Built in 1906. Had been the tallest building for almost a generation. In the late 1920s, two rival multimillionaires commenced construction of buildings each destined to be taller than the Woolworth Tower. One multimillionaire was the chairman of the board of the Bank of America. The other multimillionaire was Walter Chrysler from the Chrysler Motor Car Company. The bank building was going up in the financial district. The Chrysler building was going up on 42nd Street. But which would be the highest? The Bank of America building was scheduled for 61 stories. Chrysler added 5 floors so his would be 63 stories. When both buildings were under construction, the Bank people heard the Chrysler building would be 63 stories, and so they raised their building to 64 stories.

Dan's Papers: You mean they raced?

Hanson: Yes they did. It is in the history books. And in the end, Walter Chrysler played a trump card. Inside his building, secretly, he had his workmen build a ten-story high skylight cupola and needle. At the very last minute, after the Bank of America was fully committed, he had his workmen push up his ten-story needle inside his nearly completed building so it would be an unbeatable 73 stories. And it was. The Chrysler Building was the tallest building in the world until the Empire State Building came along in 1934.

Dan's Papers: So you're saying that Mr. Allison's client, who has already submitted plans for a five home site subdivision, intends to circumvent the law by building underground tubes and thus beat Mr. Rennert to the title of the largest private homeowner in America?

Hanson: I didn't say that. And I see our time is up. You'll have to excuse me, I have a meeting with Mr. Allison and Mr. Walters, er, I mean the people who are building Primrose just now. Good day.

Dan's Papers: You'll never get away with this.

Hanson: Who will stop me?

Dan's Papers: Dan's Papers. If it's the last thing we ever do, by George. One of these enormous private homes is quite enough in Sagaponack. Especially by people who are short.

Hanson: Get out.

Dan's Papers: I was just leaving. I've got to catch a plane back to my editor, to sound the alarm.

Hanson: Good bye.

facility. There were six gas stations in three blocks, all of which sold, besides regular gas, diesel fuel. It was a no-nonsense farm town. The idea that there would be a Starbucks where the bank was, as there is today, and the idea that there would be six chic restaurants all on the main downtown block, well, this was beyond all imagining.

There was, in 1956, no Sagaponack as we know it today. I had my newspaper business in Bridgehampton (still do) and my home in East Hampton then (still do) and I used to take a motor scooter to work everyday, heading down through the back roads of Sagaponack. Sagaponack was farms. You could see from one end of it to the other. Huge rolling fogs, which came in from the ocean, encouraged by the warmth of the freshly turned potato fields, sometimes made it almost impossible to drive down the roads. There was a riding stable. Truman Capote lived there somewhere. A dog could have gone to sleep on the white line just about anywhere in Sagaponack. The farmers kept to themselves just about as much as the summer people did.

Montauk was the happening place in the 1950s. You could drive out there, which would take three and a half hours from Manhattan, or you could take the train and a taxi to where you were going. Montauk was a thriving 1950s resort town with fifty motels, miniature golf, oceanfront restaurants and a middle-class clientele who would come again and again for their annual two-week summer vacation from their job, say, at the telephone company.

Montauk was about fishing in the 1950s, and there was (and still is) a dedicated and thriving community of commercial fishermen, surfcasters, open boat captains and charter boat captains and crews. Just about everything in Montauk was new then. Almost all the motels and hotels had been built between 1945 and 1955. It had a buoyant, fifties vacation quality about it and you could smell the salt sea breezes and you could go horseback riding or golfing or water skiing or just sit in a bar and drink beer and hang out. The drinking age was 18 then. And Chuck Berry was going strong.

He still is, isn't he?

I know I've left a lot out. I have not talked about the art community that settled in Springs, the black community that settled in Sag Harbor, the bevy of writers and editors who came to East Hampton or the garment district executives who built A-frame oceanfront homes in Westhampton Beach.

It's a big, long story, comparing then to now. What you have read above, however, is a start. ● adopted a baby girl from South Korea. Her name is Paulina: "She's so perfect, really smart and inquisitive, funny, very beautiful! Everyday we're amazed at her and amazed at how much we love her."

Do you see the world once again, as most parents do, through a child's eyes? Is that a good thing for an artist?

"I can't help but see the things that I'm doing now as work that she'll look at as an adult and begin to paint a picture of who I was as a young man. And hopefully, I'll be standing right there while she's interpreting it! I think of Dad — when I look at anything that he had, or touched, or wrote, when I see snippets of him on old home movies, that's all I have to inform me of who he was — who we are. So you hang on to those things. I think of pictures today that I'm doing as reflections of me that she'll have some day."

Paulina will have plenty of reflections to ponder as Pete has many upcoming projects on the boards including two more New Yorker covers this spring, a big hand in Disney's Treasure Planet premiering in November, and Pixar's animated feature, Finding Nemo, due out next year. In the midst of our interview, the Society of Illustrators notified Peter that he had been selected as the winner of the prestigious Hamilton King Award, —sort of an Oscar for illustrators — for one of his pieces in A Murder, a Mystery, and a Marriage, the Mark Twain novella that has been recently published for the first time.

Perhaps Peter's most heartfelt piece came as a result of September 11. He had witnessed the entire nightmarish scene from the rooftop of his Brooklyn home: "I thought numbly, 'How could I possibly comment on this through my work? How can anything exist after this: humor, art, literature — I'm almost ashamed of myself at that moment for possibly thinking forward while I'm watching this happen — while people are dying. And it occurred to me later that because I do what I do, it might be akin to the way a journalist would react — they're in shock, but they react automatically and they take pictures or write about what's happening. I wanted a way to say something but couldn't imagine how. A couple of weeks passed, and Randall and I went to a shrine set-up at our local firehouse for the eleven men of Squad One who had been killed, and I just started thinking of Halloween and how kids might dress up in costumes as their heroes."

The resulting cover on The New Yorker a couple of weeks later, "Local Heroes," depicted a brownstone-row neighborhood swarming with laughing trick-or-treaters on stoops and sidewalks: every single one of them dressed up as a policeman or fireman.

They don't worry about their enemies, the MIMs (Moms in Minivans). They have now learned to love their enemies... whenever possible.

Level 10 MITs. Very rare, but there are a few. In addition to all of the above, they have bumper stickers that say, "Horn Broke, Watch for Finger" or "I Don't Wait for the Ferry, the Ferry Waits for ME." This is the Arnold Schwartzenegger level of MIT. He knows all the other MITs on the Island. And yea, though he speeds though the valley of the shadow of debt, he fears no evil. "Meet the Writers" at 25

By Lise Visser

"For man, unlike any other thing organic or inorganic in the universe, grows beyond his work, walks up the stairs of his concepts, emerges ahead of his accomplishments."

–John Steinbeck, The Grapes of Wrath

A distinguished roster of authors chatting and signing their works, flowing vinifera and hors d'oeuvres and the warm sunshine combined to make the 25th Anniversary of the Meet the Writers Book Fair one of the very best. A radiant Kimberly Goff, owner of the Elaine Benson Gallery, welcomed the authors, distinguished guests and throngs of bibliophiles carrying on in the gracious tradition of the late and beloved Elaine Benson.

The Fair has raised hundreds of thousands of dollars for the John Steinbeck Room of the College Library, the Visiting Writer's Program and the Steinbeck Lectures. In addition, financial awards and scholarships have been given to students and further resources for the library have been acquired.

The Meet the Writers commemorative journal is a delicious collection of articles and photographs from past Book Fairs put together by Goff, Mary and Bill Peterson of Southampton College, Simon Van Booy and Joan Whitman. Some of these were published over the years in this paper under the byline of Elaine Benson. A 1978 article by our publisher, Dan Rattiner, introduced the first Book Fair and included a funny story about a brawl at the Vienna Library between Chekov, Shaw, Marx, Joyce, and Kafka.

In conjunction with the Book Fair the 14th Annual John Steinbeck Award went to Gregory Rabassa, Distinguished Professor at Queens College, for his achievement in the translation of over 40 books from Spanish and Portugese into English. Rabassa, winner of the National Book Award, has brought to English the works of world reknown writers like Gabriel Marcia Marquez and Octavio Paz. Rabassa proved to be a marvelous raconteur, amusing the crowd and eliciting bursts of laughter several times.

Phenomenal Long Island writer — being a Long Island writer is one of the rules here — Nelson de Mille signed copies of Up Country, his latest luminary novel based in Vietnam, with returning hero Paul Brenner from The General's Daughter. I started the tome late Sunday night and the decision about returning to work Monday morning or staying with Paul Brenner was a tough one.

Brilliant and enduring, Peter Matthiessen, with artist Robert Bateman, has created an exotic exploration following the fifteen existing species of cranes throughout Asia, Australia, Europe and America in The Birds of Heaven, Travels with Cranes. According to Matthiessen, these magnificent birds have an important impact on conservation efforts worldwide, fostering common global dialogue.

Betty Paraskevas writes the stories that Michael Paraskevas illustrates in their hilarious, curious world. With twenty of their collaborations published they have four animated TV series based on their books — Kids From Room 402, Maggie and the Ferocious Beast, Marvin and the Tap Dancing-Horse, and Jerolemon Street Players — and a TV Special, The Tangerine Bear.

Michael also signed a copy of his solo work, L.A. Times, a remarkable departure from the collaborations with Betty. L.A. Times illustrates the strange but alarmingly accurate interpretations of the street types found on Wilshire or Hollywood.

Michael and Betty's newest collaboration, Green Monkeys, is the strip that has run in this publication since 1999, following the popular Jr. Kroll series. While their books have the usual disclaimers to assure us that they are works of fiction and "any resemblance of character to persons living or dead is purely coincidental," it is suspected that we're all in there somewhere.

Holocaust survivor Sonia Wachstein's Too Deep Were Our Roots tells the story of her days in Vienna, fleeing to England following half a year under the Nazis. She made it to the US and developed a successful career in teaching and social work, winning a Fulbright. Her Publisher, Unet President and Sag Harbor resident James Monaco, presents her posthumous memoirs, in a poignant tribute to their long friendship.

In his acceptance speech upon receiving the Noble Prize in Literature John Steinbeck stated, "literature is as old as speech. It grew out of human need for it, and it has not changed except to become more needed." The growth in attendance at the annual gathering of writers at the Elaine Benson Gallery lends credence to this.

TRIBECA FILM FESTIVAL

The city was buzzing this week as Robert De Niro and his partners and supporters brought the red carpet to Tribeca and locations around Ground Zero to kick off the Tribeca Film Festival. Oscar winners were as plentiful as stretch limos to celebrate the festival and fete New York as the best location on Earth. Nora Ephron introduced the film About A Boy, which starred Hugh Grant in a role that had to have been written just for him. The audience looked staid, but many were howling by mid-film, especially me along with my partner in glee, Cathy Smerling. I thought the studios were going to ask for our names so they could put us in the audience for the next TV sitcom they launch. The preview was shown at the UA Theaters in Battery Park City and the after-film party was at the Regent on Wall Street.

UNFAITHFUL

Movies directed by Adrian Lyne: Fatal Attraction, 9 1/2 Weeks, Indecent Proposal, have been topics of conversation, well after the films have gone to home video. The same may be the fate for Unfaithful, which opened in New York at the Zeigfeld last week. Our TV crew was on the VIP line, pre-film, to get some soundbites but it would have been more fun and interesting to get reactions from those celebrities after the film. Unfaithful is hot with some steamy scenes of the unfaithful wife Diane Lane and Soho bookseller-heartbreaker Olivier Martinez. You'll be discussing the train scene arguing over the ending. And what a difference a decade makes–Richard Gere who seduced the women in American Gigolo and films that followed, plays the husband whose wife is cheating on him. The premiere was oh so Hollywood, very celebrity stocked.

How a Book Became a Coffee Bar in Mattituck

By Susan W. Simm

Despite the proliferation of the Starbucks chain, some people still go to great lengths for a good cappuccino. Jim "Rudy" Ryan, however, went farther than most. He opened his own coffee bar.

Jim Ryan, a.k.a. Rudy

"I never had a cappuccino before opening Rudy's," said Jim, a.k.a. Rudy, owner of the namesake business on Love Lane in Mattituck. "In fact, I never even had coffee until I met my wife, and that was only ten years ago." Though he now enjoys one every day, why not just purchase a cappuccino at the local Starbucks? This is the North Fork, remember, the only 25-mile stretch on all of Long Island that can boast a single fast-food eatery, sans drive-through. And it's not a Starbucks.

Jim Ryan, a native of West Islip, began work on Rudy's three years ago while still living in Staten Island. At the time, Jim worked for Brooklyn Union Gas before going on to market natural gas for a Houston-based company in the city. An early ambition – to start his own gas company – was thwarted when he found out how much paperwork had to be filed, not to mention the $1 million bond that would have to be posted in order for him to start his own business as a utility.

"So I transformed my business idea and realized the perfect fit was coffee," said Jim. Then, one day, he and his wife Melissa took a trip out to the North Fork that would change their lives. "On our way back home to Staten Island, we stopped for a soda, I saw the 'for rent' sign in the window and I said to my wife, 'This is the place.' She didn't know what I talking about." This location, which had sat vacant for several years at the intersection of Love Lane and Route 25 (Main Road) in Mattituck, was Jim's inspiration. Rudy's Coffee House would become a reality.

Customers constantly tell Jim about the hundred things the octagonal corner building was before it became Rudy's. It needed lots of work but the landlord was very supportive and today it is completely renovated. Although slightly reluctant to obtain a beer and wine license – something he did a year ago – because he didn't want to discourage families from coming in together, Jim has found that, because he keeps that end of the business low key, it hasn't been a deterrent. "I wanted to bring more adults in," he said, "and it also attracts college kids during the summer when live bands play on the weekends." Rudy's also serves espresso, frozen coffee drinks, lattes, ice cream, biscotti and sodas in addition to beer and local wines by the glass.

> So who's Rudy? Good question. Back during Jim's college days as a philosophy major at Stony Brook, he was writing a book.

So who's Rudy? Good question. Back during Jim's college days as a philosophy major at Stony Brook, he was writing a book. "It was about this homeless family living on a rooftop in Manhattan. The parents wanted to keep their son, Rudy, sheltered so that he wouldn't lose himself by being exposed to radio, television, and everyday distractions as well as drugs and alcohol. They had already been there themselves and were trying to protect their only son from the perils of life. Here was a boy whose parents didn't want him to lose his soul or his spirit. He would wake up in the morning and see long arms of clouds" – Jim points to ripples of white cotton strung across the ceiling of the coffee house – "and he would be talking with the animals, with his family and with God. Then one day – there was this door that led down to the street – Rudy had a dream that a bull was coming out of the door and, instead of retreating from the bull, he starts following it and it leads him down into the street. So I asked myself, now, when he goes into the world, how does he change? How does he lose himself? That's where I stopped."

To find the answer, Jim became a social worker. He worked for Little Flower in Brooklyn, where he met his wife, also a social worker, and discovered that, "having a book to research helped me to connect with the kids and when it came to creating the coffee bar, to naming it, it all came down to the book. I couldn't write the book anymore because there were a million different ways it could go. Then one day I asked myself, who is this going to touch except for me? So to make more of an impact, when I created this place, I wanted to make it Rudy's because I wanted this place to have a soul, a spirit. Maybe it's a little out of tune with everything out here – a lot of people looked at it in the beginning as 'different' – but people come in now and say they feel something spiritual here and that I take as a personal compliment. So the book that's being written is actually the book that I'm writing everyday. Not in the literal sense, but in the conversations that go on here, the way that this place might have an impact on someone's life."

Rudy's is different. Jim explains. "There are places for adults and there are places for kids. This place is for both. Instead of getting a babysitter and everybody doing something separate, I want families to come in together. I don't want communication to be lost."

Jim's brother, John, runs a coffee bar in the Riverhead Library. The two were approached about a year and a half ago and that effort is going so well that Jim wants to expand into other public libraries across the island. He also wants to be a construction consultant: build coffee bars, set up potential entrepreneurs and teach them how to run their businesses.

You won't find Jim at Rudy's on weekends. After working seven days a week for years, he now spends weekends at his new home in Aquebogue with his wife and 2-year-old son, Joe. "When I was 19, I went to Alaska to fish for six months. Having never been on a plane, I told myself that, if I came out of the whole experience alive, I would accomplish something in life. I had a little growing up to do, and the trip gave me a good work ethic that serves me well to this day."

While Jim was building Rudy's, he was going back and forth between Mattituck and Staten Island where he was still working for the gas company. After a year of sleeping in the basement a few nights a week, he said to Melissa, "Go out, come back in an hour and tell me you found a house. So she came back in an hour and, I didn't even see the land, but she said, 'This is the house, this is the model.' In an hour. It took us three years to find the right area, one hour to find the right spot and three months to build the right house."

How does Jim feel about the North Fork? After finally owning a house, he's adamant. "I'm never leaving. Ever.

With Susan Simm

Drawing a Blanc: Pinot What?

Like many of you, I was a diehard Chardonnay fanatic for most of the nineties. The more oaky and buttery, the better. But within the last two years, I have found myself drawn more and more to other, less trendy and more food-friendly whites, such as Viognier and Riesling. To use a popular phrase, I am learning to think "out of the box." Or at least, in this case, out of the bottle.

In 1992, when Mark and Kathy Lieb purchased their first 36 acres in Cutchogue, many of them were planted to Pinot Blanc. A clone of the red Pinot Noir, the white variety, while popular in Alsace and northern Italy, is a somewhat atypical grape here on the North Fork. And since the leaf clusters are often difficult to distinguish from Chardonnay, according to Edward Beltrami and Philip Palmedo, authors of The Wines of Long Island, "some early plantings on Long Island thought to be Chardonnay turned out to be Pinot Blanc." Horrors!

But, the authors lyrically continue, "turning disappointment to their advantage, at least one winery, on discovering Pinot Blanc in a newly acquired vineyard of 'Chardonnay,' adapted vinification techniques to the imposter." The results? "Often, clean, delightfully drinkable and affordable wines." Enter Lieb Family Cellars.

One of the area's oldest vineyards, the Oregon Road property that's home to the Lieb vineyard, was planted by David Mudd, pioneer vineyard manager, back in 1982. And two wines Lieb makes exclusively from the 12 acres of Pinot Blanc grapes grown there, a still and a sparkling, have made that grape the signature for the young winery.

The 2000 Pinot Blanc, of which 710 cases were made, was released in January. Less than 200 cases remain. And there's a good reason why. The light-bodied, bone-dry wine boasts lively grapefruit aromas and perfectly complements our abundant local seafood. Mouth-cleansing and vibrant, this lovely wine is on such esteemed Manhattan wine lists as that of Alain Ducasse, owner of the namesake restaurant on 58th Street, who recommends it with his halibut with parsley and shellfish sauce. Available at the winery in Mattituck for $15. Highly recommended. But don't delay.

Another recent Lieb release, its 2000 Reserve Chardonnay, is also made from 100% estate-grown fruit. This medium-bodied wine, with abundant apple and pear aromas, has a vibrant acidity and is well-priced at $15 at the winery. It would go well with chicken roasted with herbs such as thyme and sage.

While I certainly haven't abandoned my long-standing love affair with Chards, I find myself searching more and more often for less traditional options. As Howard Goldberg, after tasting the two Lieb Pinot Blancs, wrote in The New York Times back in February, "The pretty flavors and crisp acidity (give) those wines an apertif and dinner table versatility that many Chardonnays, especially oaky ones, lack."

Sounds like the start of something fruity, dry and beautiful. Cheers.

Mattituck

Everything kind of fell into place for us here. And it all goes back to the day I started writing the book. Every decision – everything I've experienced in life since – has come from that."

"But I'm not Rudy," Jim is quick to reveal. "People call me Rudy but, after going through my long-winded explanation ten times a day, I stopped correcting them because then they'd ask, so why did you name your place Rudy's? I don't know. Because it sounds better than Jim's? Still, I'm not Rudy."

Looking up at the "clouds" floating across the ceiling, I, along with many of Jim's customers, might beg to differ.

North Fork-Critic's Choice

Antares Café. Named for a brilliant star in the Scorpius constellation, this is one of the brightest stars in the North Fork restaurant firmament. Chef/owner Matt Murphy's stylish, art-filled dining room offers highly ambitious and creative dishes. The appetizers alone merit a visit and the entrees make you quickly forget the appetizers. Menu highlights have included bouillabaisse with local fish and shellfish, lightly seared foie gras accompanied by mango and crystallized ginger and filet mignon in a cabernet reduction. Chestnut flour gnocchi was another knockout. Duck dishes are always inspired. Desserts keep pace and a cheese plate is often available. Prices range from $ 18-28. Brewer Yacht Yard, Greenport, 477-8839 (Bradbrook, 6/23/00).

Coeur des Vignes. Outstanding classic French cuisine in a charming timber-beamed house of relaxed elegance. Chef Arie Pavlou's foie gras with papaya, peppercorns, pomegranate and peach schnapps was honored in 2001 by Sante magazine's cooking with spirits competition. Perennial Wine Spectator Award of Excellence winner. Escargots cooked in parsley, garlic butter and white wine sauce tops the list of timeless favorites. Fish specialties frequently fresh from the boat – theirs. Excellent game dishes are similarly acquired. Prix fixe dinners provide excellent value. Entrees $18-$31. Main Road, Southold. 765-2656. (Bradbrook, 10/15/01)

Cooperage Inn. Chefs Liamo and Hegeman carry the banner of North Fork cuisine. Freshness of local ingredients evident in every bite, produce comes from neighboring farmstands. Inspired appetizers, topped by pan-seared fresh mozzarella over spinach with artichoke hearts and plum tomatoes. Homemade dressings enliven fresh salads, notably the house salad of greens, fruits, raisins and nuts. Superb steaks and pastas. Rigatoni ala vodka with pancetta, basil and sage, particularly noteworthy. Cornmeal encrusted Atlantic salmon attains a very high level. Excellent values include grilled double pork chops atop wild mushroom herb stuffing. Owner Jonathan Perkins' stylish country restaurant is a North Fork gem. Entrees $14-$30. Sound Ave. Baiting Hollow. 727-8994. (Simm, 6/29/01).

Do Little's. Very welcoming and unpretentious. An excellent menu for diners interested in fresh, smartly prepared dishes that are not calorically trumped up. Thai mussels in ginger/lemongrass broth hit the mark. Excellent pasta dishes, headlined by justifiably famous Seafood Pasta in white wine sauce, filled with mussels, clams and shrimp over linguine with fresh tomatoes and spinach. Stuffed ravioli with sun-dried tomatoes and mozzarella is beautifully done. Sensibly priced wine list, with a knowing nod to local vintages. Entrees, $12.95-$19.95. Rt. 25, Mattituck Plaza, Mattituck. 298-4000. (Bradbrook, 7/28/01).

Fauna. On the same site as the former Hans Gasthaus in Aquebogue, Mark Mittelman's elegant New American is worlds away in terms of cuisine, décor and atmosphere. Two distinct dining areas, each with their own charms. Cool shades of purple suffuse the lounge and bar area, while the dining room is country white on white and enlivened by East End landscapes. The menu is among the most eclectic and adventurous on the North Fork. High marks to the sesame crusted ahi tuna sashimi and the smoked Aquebogue duckling. Exciting accompaniments too. 720 Main Road, Aquebogue, 722-5813. Entrees $14-$28. (Bradbrook, 7/6/01)

La Plage. Obscure geography, sensational cuisine. This sums up owner/chef Wayne Wadington's destination restaurant on Long Island Sound, north of the tiny village of Wading River. No expense spared in the acquisition of top ingredients, local or otherwise. Complex recipes spell highly creative fusion cuisine: New American in heart, French in spirit. Many highlights include: Chilled lobster soup garnished with roe; salad of tart apples with bleu cheese, walnuts and mache; rare yellowfin tuna with homemade potato chips; caramelized jumbo sea scallops with snow crab fritter. Desserts are imaginative and exceptionally well executed. Entrees $17-$28. 744-9200. (Bradbrook, 8/4/00.)

Ross' Rotisserie and Smokehouse. A casual, homey eat-in or take-out spot opened by John Ross, former chef/owner of Ross' North Fork Restaurant. Great rotisserie and crispy fried chicken; marinated, honey-glazed duck legs; hickory-smoked spareribs; homemade soups and chowders; and many cooked-from-scratch side dishes. Every Friday fish fry provides excellent value. A special 6-pound LI duck, cooked crisp, boned and quartered, accompanied by duck sauce and a garnish of apricots and cranberries ($19.99) is available by reservation the day before. Open every day from 12-8. Route 48, Southold, 765-9655. (Simm, 10/5/01).

The Seafood Barge. Deserved reputation among the elite seafood restaurants on Long Island. Owner/manager team of Dick Ehrlich and Betsy Flinn ensure every plate served adheres to a very high standard. Menu highlights include mussels sautéed with garlic and shallots, tomato concasse, tarragon, white wine and cream; shelled lobster pot pie with baby vegetables, crispy duck breast and leg confit in a peach/apple reduction. Desserts range from restrained to decadent. Wine list, heavy on local vintages is a Wine Spectator "New Award Winner." Panoramic views of Peconic Bay. Rt. 25, Southold. Entrees $24-$32. 765-3010. (Bradbrook, 8/3/01).

Touch of Venice. Simplicity, freshness, flavor are the hallmarks here. Named appropriately for cuisine, location on the banks of Mattituck Inlet and an intricate wall mural dominating the dining room. Proprietor Ettore Pennach shares the cooking with son Brian. Among kitchen's highlights: stuffed artichoke, eggplant Sorrentino, filet mignon au jus, with garlic and mushrooms. Lobster meat, a frequent special, is an exciting dish of imaginative complexity. It combines chunks of lobster on a bed of al dente spaghetti with fresh seasonal vegetables topped with basil oil and lemon juice. Entrees $12-$21. Wickham Ave., Mattituck. 298-5851. (Bradbrook, 8/4/00).

Golf Benefit for San Simeon by the Sound

One of the major events on the North Fork golf calendar is just around the corner as San Simeon by the Sound holds its sixth annual Golf Benefit at Cherry Creek Golf Links on Thursday, May 23.

San Simeon by the Sound is a non-for-profit residential health care facility on Route 48 in Greenport. Its 150-bed facility offers twenty-four hour skilled nursing care in addition to long and short-term rehabilitative services. The benefit's proceeds are used to purchase equipment and maintain the building.

Entry fees range from $175 for one golfer to $750 for a foursome and tee sponsorship. The fee includes greens fees, cart, lunch, cocktail hours, dinner and awards.

Cherry Creek Golf Links is a top East End challenge. A par-73 layout, the course boasts two of Long Island's longest holes, each over 600 yards from the tips. The third hole and the 13th were both winners in last year's Best Hole competition in Dan's Papers. The course is one of the best on Long Island for conditioning and the clubhouse is spacious and welcoming.

Send payments to San Simeon By The Sound, 61700 Route 48, Greenport, New York, 11944. Attention: Priscilla deMosi.

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

If you threw your umbrella away a month or so ago, it's time for another. The rain in the Hamptons has made all our flowers grow; everything looks so lush and green. It's beginning to look a lot like summer...soon the horns will blow...

Check out the sale at Porch & Patio on Montauk Highway in East Quogue. There are over seventeen collections of Winston furniture available and there is not additional charge for special orders. This store is packed with summer merchandise, ready to be placed on your deck or patio. Remember the early bird always catches the worm...

While I was in Southampton I wandered into the Southampton Stationery shop on Hampton Road. Wow, what a large selection of Hallmark cards here. I'm an old fashioned Hallmark gal and if you are too you will appreciate the Hallmark Rose card and Gold Crown card...Got all my cards for the month of June. By the way, they are offering discounts for either card.

If you're in Hampton Bays, check out Summer Activities on Montauk Highway for their annual sale. There is a cool 20% off all pool and spa chemicals, 15% off solar covers, floats, toys and pool equipment and 50% off selected clearance merchandise. And don't forget that their specialty is dewaterization, maintenance, service and repairs. Call 728-0682.

There is a back yard sale blowout going on Jobs Lane in Southampton...Norahs and Offshore Surf and Sport are selling lots of merchandise and nothing is over $30 to make room for new merchandise that they will be offering inside. I love those backyard sales; you get such great bargains.

Here I go again at Saks Fifth Avenue on Hampton Road and Main Street in Southampton. The offer I can never refuse: Clinique is doing their exclusive limited edition (while supplies last) promotion. Spend $35 or more and receive a deluxe-size gift...One of my favorite products by Clinique? It's the Foaming Facial Wash; I make sure I never run out of it.

Stopping in Sag Harbor this week, my hometown...I found a new store that everyone is talking about and I think everyone should see. Pure Vida, sitting pretty on Main Street right next door to the Cigar Bar (which, by the way, is a nice place to meet friends for a cocktail after work,) is perfect for the twenty to thirty something generation, and classic for all the hip moms. This store has lots of energy and funky clothing and can dress you from head to toe, with plenty of accessories to choose from. The store name Pure Vida, a Costa Rican saying that means "Pure Life," lives up to its name with vibrant colors and artwork that is made of recycled steel, really something to see and enjoy. No kidding, a one stop shop for all ages. Check it out, I welcome your email with your opinion on this one. (shoptil@danspapers.com).

Right across the street at Sue's Gift Shop you will find really unique country and classic giftware for everyone on your gift list. This shop is filled to the rafters with candles, lamps, tables, chairs, shelves, plaques, hand painted items, photo frames, and so much more. I never walk out empty handed in this store, bet you won't either.

On the Long Wharf at Around Again and Around Again Home there is a wonderful assortment of quality-recycled clothing, accessories, and furniture. You can probably furnish an entire house here especially if you love the shabby chic motif. And the prices are definitely affordable.

Hey, a brand new shop has opened on Washington Street in Sag Harbor. This Saturday, May 18, join Australian Femininity in the celebration and enjoy the styles of women's clothing from Australia, New Zealand and the South Pacific. See you there!

That's it for this week. I have to get home to take care of Tino the Terror, he misses me when I go shopping all day. I am already charting my shopping course for next week. Until then...Ciao and Happy Shopping!

Please e-mail me at shoptil@danspapers.com if you have any questions about shopping or are having a sale that you would like everyone to know about.

DAN'S FASHION

Jean Scene: How Low Can You Go?

It doesn't really matter if it's spring, or summer or winter for that matter; jeans are a staple for fashion mavens and garden junkies alike. Once it was a dare-we-be seen out in our jeans world and they were reserved for the fashion-don'ts, but now they get the big thumbs up at places like the theatre or the Oscars. What really matters is that jeans are hot and with offices everywhere going casual chic, it seems that jeans are acceptable just about everywhere.

The jeans scene can be defined by the most recent influence: super low. Last summer brought the swell of Seven jeans and Barney's is selling out of stock on a weekly basis. And upon observing the scene there recently, one can surmise exactly how coveted these styles are and how serious people are about their jeans. The scene on the eighth floor in Manhattan was nothing short of unbelievable. Brooke Shields was not kidding when she said, "Nothing gets between me and my Calvins."

And it is not to say that Calvin's days have completely passed, but there are many other heavy hitters in the jeans market these days and the bohemian-chic resurgence has made jeans the preffered wear of women pretty everywhere.

And one cannot ignore (men included) the phenomenon known as "butt cleavage" that was given front and center coverage (or lack thereof) on Gucci billboards everywhere for the past year. Above the pool at the Chateau Marmont, a large butt cleavage billboard loomed over Sunset Boulevard like a permanent full moon. Two women embrace, with low dresses drooping low enough to expose just enough (or too much?) derrière to feature the place where the crest of the back and the rear meet. Gucci had claimed butt cleavage as their own.

Now where exactly did the phenomenon begin? Fashion forward brands like Zoomp and Frankie B. are pushing the jean revolution ever lower. Designers have kept diminishing inseams, in order to reveal just a little more skin. The traditional low rise six-inch inseam has almost been cut in half in certain styles and as the weather gets warmer, expect to see a lot of them.

Seven jeans, in particular, have reached cult status in the almost two years since they were introduced and many stores simply cannot keep them in stock. Their jeans come in a variety of styles, with various distressed shading and low back-pocket with style names like Alamo and Manhattan. The styles cost a pretty penny, and will run you as much as $140.

Hot spots to purchase jeans in the Hamptons include: Springer's for their classy Paul Smith styles; Scoop Beach sporting William B, Marc by Marc Jacobs, Juicy, Earl Jeans, Seven, Paper Denim Cloth and Helmut Lang; Henry Lehr for Juicy, Joop, Paper Denim Cloth, Earl Jeans and Helmut Lang; At Turpan they have the new exclusive Vintage Levi's circa 1955 Marlon Brando; go to Rexer-Parkes for Seven and Katoyonne Adeli; Tanger outlets for Club Monaco and Levis; The Gap for classic styles in capri and boot cut.

The younger set tends toward brands like Marc, Juicy, Theory, Miss Sixty, Mavi, Mudd and Seven, while older fashionistas are favoring Helmut Langs, Levis new Red Line, Marc, Paper Denim Cloth and Zoomp.

With thongs playing peek-a-boo, the low jeans trend is showing no signs of abating anytime soon. The jeans-phenom has fueled the low thong industry and the all-essential bikini wax. These things are linked and when you hit the beach, a super-low bathing suit will feel like nothing new.

Out East, the influences of the city chic have clearly

CLASSIC CARS BY BOB GELBER

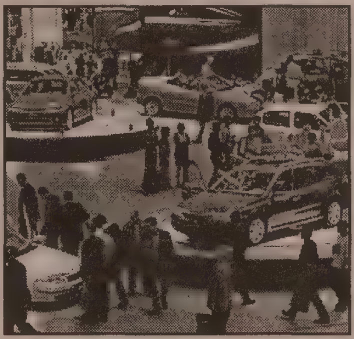
CAR SHOWS

I was just informed that on May 24, there will be another Hamptons Auto Classic car auction and Concours D'Elegance. Peter Mole, through his collector car company, Kensington Motor Group, is the entrepreneur behind these wonderful yearly car events. The event has been held on every Memorial Day for the last several years, right on Montauk Highway as you enter Bridgehampton. To the car enthusiasts of the Hamptons, this show has always been a grand way to start off the summer season. If you like cars, there are always many collectible cars that can be viewed and usually purchased. I've also noticed that because this event is a low key kind of car show/auction, sometimes you can get some real bargains if you bid and shop smartly.

I wish Peter good luck, fair weather and lots of red Ferraris. For general information, call 631-537-1868.

Being a car guy, over the years I've attended many automotive expositions throughout the world. The two that have impressed me most are the bi-annual car show in Hershey, Pennsylvania and the Paris Auto Show. For collector cars, the Hershey event is mind boggling. I'm not sure how many acres are involved, but it certainly must be more than one hundred acres of collector cars and parts. Held in the spring and fall, the show lasts three days and it is almost impossible to see everything in the time allotted.

There are collector cars of all types in every imaginable condition for sale. However, it seems the main appeal of this show is car parts. Though mostly American car-part oriented, there are still many foreign car part dealers and collectors. I'm talking thousands upon thousands of dealers from all over the country hawking their merchandise. Need a distributor cap for a '29 Buick Special? This is the place to find one. What about a '65 Shelby Mustang? Which, my friends, you can literally build from scratch from the many real parts that are available here. Note: Don't think it hasn't been done! Note #2: Carefully check the serial numbers and history of any "real" Shelbys for sale!



Then there's The Paris Auto Show. This event makes the NY Auto Show look as sparce as a Yugo dealer's showroom. First, you gotta understand that there are many more models of cars made in Europe than in America. All Frenchmen drive Peugeots, Germans – Volkswagens, Swedes – Volvos, and the British will drive anything as long as it has wood and leather in the interior. Add to this diversity many other cars imported from Japan and America, as well as a display of all truck lines built in the world and you have an event of Biblical proportions.

The show is held in two separate buildings that are next to each other. Because of the overflow of cars, many are displayed outside the buildings. All in all, this show is sensory overload when it comes to viewing everything that is new in Europe as far as automobiles are concerned.

Another car event that has blown me away is the yearly "Old Timers Day" at the Nurbergring in Germany. All of the finest collector race cars in Europe meet here in the spring and compete with one another on this world famous track. Don't get me wrong, we have some great automotive collections here in the States, (in fact, some of the finest are right here on Long Island). However, as you know, most of the world's great racing machines were born in Europe, and that's where they have stayed. Plus, some of the great European car factories, (read: Ferrari and Porsche) empty their private collections for this event and truck their cars to the "Ring." I don't know what it is about factory cars, maybe they are more pure than privately owned vehicles. There is nothing more exciting than seeing a vintage factory owned race car stretching its legs, bellowing exhaust noises as it slides around a race course.

Car collecting is a major hobby whether one collects Fords or Ferraris. There is always an event somewhere at some time that can be attended. I know that Porsche collectors are different from say, Ferrari guys. There's even stiff competition among the Ford camps, Chevy collectors and Chrysler lovers. You also have many car weirdos who collect Edsels, Henry J's, Nashes, Renaults, Studebaker Champions and Fiats.

That's the real beauty of a car show. Mixed among all the mainstream collector cars, you will sometimes come across a "wacko" collector car, a car you've never even heard of, much less ever seen. These cars are always the most interesting vehicles at any show. They always bring the most smiles, because they are not valuable or serious vehicles. Enjoy the show.

Bob Gelber, an automotive journalist living in the Hamptons, appears regularly on television as an automotive expert. You can email him atremsenburg@aol.com hit. Scoop Beach sports enough styles to outfit the entire line at Conscience Point. One thing is for sure for summer: lower, lighter, longer is better.

Outside of Paris and Milan, New York is the fashion mecca, but if there's one trend that moves West to East, its denim, which perhaps can be attributed to names like the Gap, Levi's and now Sevens all setting up shop in California. Kristen DiGiacomo, a fashion editor at Town and Country magazine said, "Jeans are one of the only high fashion trends that starts out west and move east, which makes the bohemian-relaxed look of this summer all the more relevant."

The question is what styles will be right for you, which styles will make that already sexy peasant shirt look even better, and most importantly – what is too low?

Levi's are classic and sexy and the San Francisco based contingent manages to be cool no matter what the trend. They truly have styles for every frame, body type for men and women. Fuller fitting 501's function as your standby best friend and the new super low stretch jeans are advocated by fashion editors everywhere as, "Making everyone look thin." –J.R.

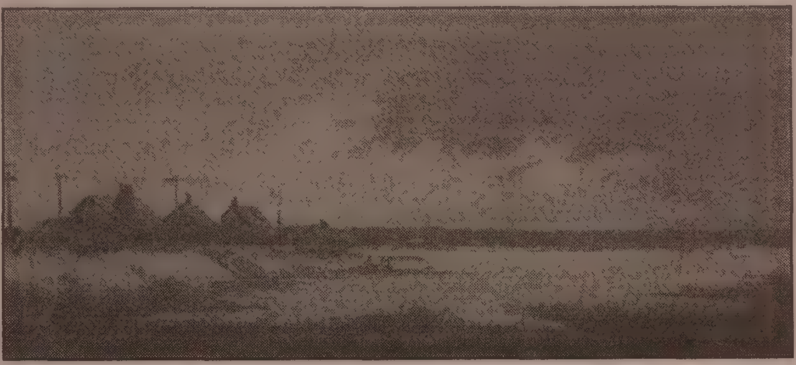
SPRING PREVIEW AT LIZAN TOPS

The title "Spring Preview" suggests an association with those aspects of the season to come: fragrant apple blossoms, a new life cycle, renewal. Yet if we were to consider this idea literally, many pieces in the current exhibit at East Hampton's Lizan Tops Gallery would not apply. In a nutshell, there are pieces that don't automatically conjure up images of spring.

No matter. There's another meaning to spring that does apply. This is the gallery's tenth anniversary year, and in that regard the works connote a promise of renewal – a new cycle of aesthetic projects that is just beginning.

While some works may recall past endeavors by gallery artists, there remains the concept of replenishment. Consider Ralph Carpentier's "Silo," a panoramic landscape that suggests something more: a gathering storm, perhaps. Another landscape by Derek Buckner, "Sun on the Water," recreates the area around Cranberry Hole Road where a similar mood is evoked: a storm may be just beginning.



"Something more" is clearly evident in James Guppy's work, represented here by "Evening Tulip," a mysterious narrative where a man is caught between two tulips. Is he walking away from or walking toward his demise? If it's freedom he gets, that's certainly rebirth. Mr. Guppy has often toyed with such a surrealistic puzzle, regardless of the season.

David Geiser's "Blue Horizon" is another narrative suggesting the story of creation, another play on renewal. (This critic interpreted the series as one entire piece.) Gavin Zeigler's "Elounda" doesn't seem to fit the renewal theme, but the idea that his pennies could continue forever does indicate "something more."

Diane Mayo's stoneware and raku pieces are a good example of both "something more" and rebirth. Her bird nests not only go beyond her signature pots, where birds are often featured, but nesting is a more literal sign of spring. Ms. Mayo's broken plates incorporated into the nests are an enigma, unless you consider that birds use this material when building their abodes.

But here's where "something more" plays a part. What could Ms. Mayo be thinking? (And more importantly, what does she want the viewer to think?) Yours truly always thought that Ms. Mayo was a closet conceptualist. This may prove it.

Spring Preview will be on view at Lizan Tops Gallery until May 27.

HONORING THE ARTIST: PAM TOPHAM

This week's cover by Sag Harbor tapestry artist Pam Topham has both particular and profound meanings. As she herself simply says, "The Shadmoor Cliffs in Montauk are daunting."

But those cliffs assume so much more significance the longer we talk to Ms. Topham. First, there are historical implications. "Did you know that the area was the site for World War II observation posts and for activities involving the Rough Riders?" Ms. Topham informs us.

Next, the cliffs serve as a symbol for the artist's long commitment to environmental issues. "The area is the centerpiece of the East End's environmental movement," Ms. Topham remarks. "It has taken years to protect and preserve these lands."

On a personal note, Ms. Topham is also quick to point out that the Shadmoor Cliffs are where she used to watch her son, Adam, surf. More recently, however, the place functions as a philosophical reminder. "When you're at the cliffs at Montauk you are reminded that you are in a different place."

Even so, the Shadmoor Cliffs represent a familiar home for Ms. Topham as well. "I have taken three different roadtrips across America with my daughter, Eliza," she says. " When you go away and you come back, you are reminded that some things have been here all along. It takes coming back to the familiar to inspire me."

It's reasonable that Ms. Topham's penchant for landscape should take the form of tapestry. A friend of hers describes her work as "nature weaving nature." (Ms. Topham only uses natural materials like linen, wool and silk.) She herself has a visual talent for recreating what she sees on her trips – far and wide.

But Ms. Topham also loves to regale people with oral descriptions. "When we took the Southern route on a trip, we'd come from the Smokey Mountains to the foothills to farmland to rocks. Then there were the little mountains in Nevada. We'd go over them, never knowing what would be on the other side. Sometimes there would be sagebrush, sometimes salt lakes."

Nowadays, Ms. Topham's trips are reserved for plane travel when she visits her daughter, Maya, and granddaughter, Solange, in San Francisco. "I can still sketch the land," she says laughing. "From the plane thousands of miles up in the air.

Closer to the ground is more Ms. Topham's speed; the Shadmoor Cliffs provided a final meaning in this regard. "I drew them from the beach and from the dunes," she recalls. "I can see them from both a vertical and horizontal perspective. There are also infinite light changes to draw."

All in all, the Shadmoor Cliffs represent something special for Ms. Topham. They are special for us as well.

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Topham's cover piece can be seen in an exhibit, "America the Beautiful," at East Hampton's Arlene Bujese Gallery from July 13 - August 1.

Saturday May 18 - Closed for Graduation

Saturday May 25 - GREY GARDENS
Back by popular demand, this somewhat shocking documentary remains compellingly poetic and touching. It captures a bit of the later years of Edith Bouvier Beale and her daughter, Edie (aunt and cousin of Jacqueline Onassis) filmed in their decaying, overgrown mansion in East Hampton. A hauntingly memorable experience.

Guy de Fraumeni's HOLLYWOOD in The Hamptons

Spider-Man

Ah-h-h! 'Tis Spring in the burgeoning-to-florid Hamptons, springing forth along the road-sides are big, multi-colored (some are rust-hued) automotive vehicles emblazoned with FOR SALE signs. Arriving, too, are other pesky things, like insects. I don't care what you say, a bug is a BUG and, they are bugging! The warm weather brings out all sorts of plagues. Not the least invasive pestilence is the summer blockbuster movie, the over-budgeted, over-special effected, over-noisy audio tracked spectacles that batter your senses with ACTION. Some parasitical vermin hatch early to get the jump on the others and, to jump on you with blood-sucking crazed attacks.

Arriving early in local movie houses and beating heavily against the screens like heat-craving arthropods is Spider-Man, having been hatched in the incubated, hot-with-comic book-mentality-minds of producers ablaze with the infectious nature of hairy, insectile bugginess. Spider-Man, appears with only two legs but the acrobatic dexterity of a combination of dozens of insects and, pleasantly, the grace of a ballet dancer. Those who've read Marvel Comics know that he is not an alien nor, an eccentric of any kind. Instead, simply a plain, disaffected, city kid. Just your normal, masked, red and blue spandexed young guy who flies through the city of New York with the greatest of ease as your friendly, neighborhood crime fighter. Here, the choice of Tobey Maguire, as the boy-to-man to spider-to-avenger, is at least as important as the computer generated artifices. I wish Tobey had more time to blend and mix the character aspects because the better parts of this movie are those that are grounded. So good, seeing the East End's own Cliff Robertson giving the film modesty and goodness.

BZZ-ZT! There goes another. Darn it.

Enigma (+)

This is a brilliant film, notwithstanding that it is full of unexplained mysteries and holes in the script. It is a spy thriller about what took place in Bletchley Park, England, during World War II where the German code, Enigma, was broken.

The most famous story about Bletchley Park was that of Alan Turing. Turing was a true genius and one of the inventors of the computer that broke the code. He was portrayed by Derek Jacobi in the film Breaking The Code, which was a story about what happened to Turing after returning to civilian life. By cracking the German's supposedly unbreakable code, he was perhaps as instrumental as any general in winning the war. Breaking the code allowed Allied aircraft to protect the cargo ships that were steaming from America to Great Britain with supplies that won the war.

Enigma reports on what happened when the code was upgraded by the Nazis and the information to the Allies was cut off. Another math genius, Tom Jericho (Dougray Scott), who suffered a nervous breakdown, is brought back to crack the upgraded code. He becomes enmeshed with two women, Claire Romilly (Saffron Burrows), and her roommate Hester Wallace (Kate Winslet). A British intelligence agent, Wigram (Jeremy Northam), appears. There is a question of a mole working for the Nazis at Bletchley who is responsible for the Nazis changing their code. Claire, with whom Tom is infatuated, has disappeared and is suspected of being the mole. Tom and Hester not believing the worst, want to find her.

Also included in the film is the discovery and concealment by the Allies of the involvement of the U.S.S.R. in the killing of thousands of Polish army officers at Katyn Forest in Poland. That atrocity had previously been blamed on the Nazis. The Allies did not want to embarrass the U.S.S.R. who actually perpetuated the war crime, because it was an essential ally against the Nazis.

The holes in the script include explanations for events and the ability of Tom and Hester to easily steal documents from the spy center. The explanations given by Tom on the various techniques and processes used to break the code went over my head.

A.O. Scott of The New York Times wrote, "The mystery of Engima is how a rich historical subject, combined with so much first-rate talent a highly capable (if not always exciting) director, a fine English cast, a script by Tom Stoppard could have yielded such a flat, plodding picture." I disagree with his review. I believe Enigma is a hit."

Before Ed Koch was a movie critic for Dan's Papers he was the mayor of New York City.

MAY 21 - JUNE 9, 2002

In a crumbling Victorian boat house in the Missouri Ozarks, two people trapped by their past find hope and promise in their shared humanity. This Pulitzer Prize-winning valentine, by one of America's most gifted playwrights, is both lyrical and luminous with definably American themes. A contemporary classic.

theatre review: private lives... by barry gordin

Private Lives in this current revival is simply sensational. The classic comedy has opened for a limited engagement at the Richard Rodgers Theatre direct from an acclaimed sold-out run in London's West End.

Noel Coward's comedy premiered in London in 1930 starring the playwright and the legendary Gertrude Lawrence and has seen many revivals over the years. It has been a vehicle for Tallulah Bankhead, Maggie Smith, Elizabeth Taylor, and more recently it even survived a London production with Joan Collins. I doubt, however, if the play has ever been so irresistibly performed or produced with such an unerring eye for detail.

Rarely have I been so thoroughly entertained by a comedy in the theatre. Directed by Howard Davies, the play is the power struggle of a sparing divorced couple, Amanda and Elyot (played by Lindsay Duncan and Alan Rickman), who find it impossible to live together and yet are not fully alive when apart. These two remarkable actors embody their roles with such illuminating conviction, that this simple story is transformed into a mesmerizing play about love and acceptance.

Duncan and Rickman last starred together on Broadway in Les Liaisons Dangereuses in 1987 also directed by Howard Davies. The first moment they spy each other from their adjacent balconies, with the orchestra below playing their song "Someday I'll Find You", speaks volumes. Her smile alone lights up the theatre and tells us instantly of her fear and delight all at once. You sense immediately that the two are kindred spirits. They have been divorced for five years, and both are newly remarried and honeymooning at the same hotel in the South of France. Each is already at odds with their respective mates. Elyot has married Sybil, a stubborn young girl full of insecurities and questions about Amanda. Amanda has also found a younger companion in her new husband Victor, a starched, dim witted, lanky bore with protruding ears, whose very presence is a stark contrast to both Elyot and Amanda. The first act is a tasty hors d'oeuvre served with wit and style.

Alan Rickman and Lindsay Duncan star as Elyot and Amanda

In the second act the action heats up and the two actors are perfect foils for one another. He displays a pompous air of self-righteous machismo and she shows a delicate free spirited, devil-may-care attitude that does not keep her from standing her ground no matter the consequences. Under Mr. Davies' skillful hand, these two gifted actors dig beneath the sophisticated humor and reveal the carnal lust which propels their gamesmanship. They love, they fight, and they love again. They behave like spoiled, pampered children constantly longing for a suitable equal to mirror their own sacred sense of self importance. They give us glimpses of the tortured insecure souls, which lie beneath the glib façade, and then just as quickly hide it away again with amazing displays of knowing self assurance.

The sets designed by Tim Hatley are a sumptuous eyeful. Amanda's Paris apartment is a magnificent penthouse lush with color and period detail boasting a terraced view of the Eiffel Tower. The costumes by Jenny Beavans are chic and elegant, and look wonderful on the actors, who wear them with the sleek comfort they deserve. Ms Duncan's first act evening gown is the ultimate of sophistication. The lighting designed by Peter Munford is also outstanding. The Eiffel Tower at night as viewed from Amanda's apartment is a sight to behold.

The supporting actors are equally wonderful displaying robust playfulness and comic flair. Emma Fielding as Sybil is full of petulant youthful indignation. As Victor, Adam Godley, displays a flawless sense for the comic truth and in the process is ultimately endearing. The slowness with which the reality of each situation registers upon him is delicious to watch. Near the end of the second act, when Sybil and Victor go at one another with relish and gusto, you actually believe Amanda and Elyot may have been transformed by the appalling mirror image the other two present. We sense as they exit that just maybe there could be a happy ending and these two may have grown older and wiser.

silvia lehrer's cooking column

A meal can be made remarkable for its simplicity and making a meal for guests does not have to be tiresome or intimidating. I recall many fine dinners prepared for us by friends. The dishes were tasty and beautifully presented with a certain freedom to the meal in that everything was prepared ahead. Like all fine meals it followed certain principles of menu planning. One need not be obsessed with a particular dish – simply a coherent theme with a balance of flavors, colors and textures.

A good menu always takes the seasons into account. We are in high spring with farm stands all about us offering the most superior ingredients of the season.

The light neutral taste of salmon is a perfect foil for a variety of seasonings. A do-ahead horseradish mixture blankets individual salmon filets to bake later. Local fresh asparagus are trimmed, arranged in their bake/serve dish, and ready to roast with a coating of your best extra-virgin olive oil and coarse salt. Little new potatoes simply boiled and served with a pat of sweet butter and fresh parsley would be a lovely addition. A country salad with goat cheese and walnuts in a lemony walnut vinaigrette makes a great beginning to your meal.

A sweet ending is a must. Easy does it with something fruity such as a colorful mix of fresh berries with a piquant berry sauce.

COUNTRY SALAD WITH GOAT CHEESE, WALNUTS AND BACON

This satisfying salad blends pungent greens, fresh croutons, a crumble of goat cheese and nuggets of crisp bacon in a lemon walnut vinaigrette.

Serves 6

1 head chicory
1 head escarole
1 cup croutons, preferably homemade*
1/2 pound bacon
1 log (5 1/2 ounce) goat cheese

For the Vinaigrette:
2 shallots, finely chopped
2 tablespoons lemon juice
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
3 tablespoons walnut oil
1 cup toasted walnut pieces for garnish

1. Remove any bruised outer leaves of greens. Wash and spin dry each lettuce separately. Roll in paper towels to absorb excess moisture and refrigerate up to one day, stored in a plastic bag.

2. To prepare your own croutons (optional)*. Cut 3-4 slices of day-old bread into 1/2- inch thick squares. Place cubes on a baking sheet and toss to coat in a little olive oil. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven about 8-10 minutes until brown and crisp. (Can be prepared ahead and stored in a dry cool place.) Cook bacon strips in microwave or skillet until crisp. Drain on paper towels and set aside.

Prepare Vinaigrette:
3. In a mixing bowl combine shallots, lemon juice and seasonings and stir to mix. Gradually whisk in oils until thoroughly incorporated. Taste to adjust seasoning as necessary. Can be prepared up to several hours ahead.

4. When ready to serve, combine greens, croutons and bacon in a salad bowl. Pour on vinaigrette and toss with abandon to coat. Crumble goat cheese over the greens and sprinkle with toasted walnuts.

SALMON IN HORSERADISH CRUST

Just mix the topping, coat the filets and bake for a savory salmon supper. I prefer salmon cooked slightly pink in the center to assure moistness.

Serves 6

2 - 2 1/4 pounds center-cut filet of salmon with skin
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper

For the crust:
2 large shallots, finely chopped
2 tablespoons prepared horseradish
1 - 1 1/2 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons grainy Dijon mustard
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
3 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley
2-3 tablespoons dried breadcrumbs, preferably homemade
Freshly ground pepper

1. Have fishmonger cut the salmon into 6 even filets. Rinse fish and pat dry with paper towels. Place in a shallow, lightly greased, heatproof Pyrex or ceramic baking dish and sprinkle with salt and freshly ground pepper.

2. In a mixing bowl combine the ingredients for the crust and season to taste with pepper. Spread the mixture in an even layer over the top of each filet. The recipe can be prepared ahead to this point and refrigerated covered with plastic wrap.

Preheat oven to 425 degrees.

3. When ready to serve, bring the salmon to room temperature and uncover. Bake on the middle rack of a preheated oven for 8-10 minutes until springy to the touch and slightly pink in the center. Serve with boiled new potatoes and roasted asparagus, if desired

ASSORTED BERRIES WITH PIQUANT BERRY SAUCE

Look for bright clean appearance when purchasing berries. The individual cells of raspberries, blackberries and boysenberries that make up the berries should be lustrous, plump, tender and fully ripened.

Serves 6-8

3-4 containers fresh berries: strawberries, raspberries, blueberries or blackberries
1 package (12 oz.) frozen raspberries
1 jar (12 oz.) raspberry preserves
2 tablespoons Kirsch
Vanilla ice cream or frozen yogurt (optional)

1. Place fresh berries in a colander and pat dry on paper towels. Set aside and reserve any berries that are not absolutely perfect. Refrigerate in a suitable container for several hours or overnight.

2. Place frozen raspberries in a strainer over a bowl to defrost and drain. Put the defrosted berries in a saucepan with the raspberry preserve and any picked over fresh berries. Bring to a boil; adjust heat and simmer, stirring occasionally about 10-12 minutes until slightly thickened. Push the mixture through a strainer or food mill to eliminate seeds. Stir in the Kirsch and refrigerate covered until ready to serve.

Note: If desired serve the berries spiked with the berry sauce over vanilla ice cream or frozen yogurt.

Magnolia

29 Main Street, Sag Harbor
631-725-0101

As someone put it recently, Sag Harbor is a town of theme restaurants, or for the more seasoned weekend veteran, it is a town of boites, restaurants and local gathering places in a cozy setting. In other words, if you are going to survive as a restaurateur in Sag Harbor, you'd better be relaxed, you should provide or exude comfort, you must earn the support of the residents and have a local following.

Magnolia, the new restaurant that used to be Serafina's, has so far scored on all of these prerequisites and they are poised to have a great inaugural season this summer, which will be attributable to equal parts atmosphere, food and the fact that Sag Harbor locals like to drink.

In a town that welcomes new neighbors, Magnolia's outdoor tables and attractive facade beckon diners to step up and check out the menu; I have seen many wanderers do just that in the past month since the restaurant opened.

When you do come in and sit down, the ceiling fans are spinning silently overhead, the candles are lit and you feel immediately at ease. On any given occasion, the bar is full and the place projects a feeling of warmth. The tall bar tables and stools are filled with casual people grabbing a drink and a bite to eat. As owner Linda Batiancela put it, she wanted the restaurant to be comfortable, to take "laid back" up a notch or two. And with a name like Magnolia easily conjuring southern inspiration, the Cajun infused menu along with the gracious southern style, create an atmosphere that is truly unique.

The menu is southern infused comfort food, that embraces its seaside location quite well. The menu is indeed comprehensive with an ample choice of salads, seafood and raw selections starting off the menu.

A comprehensive raw bar is available taking us straight to New Orleans. This will be a popular choice for Magnolia-goers in the summertime, enjoying a glass of wine and the selection of oysters, clams and shrimp.

Upon sitting we are greeted with a warm basket of bread and a bowl of spiced olives. With a nice selection of music playing and the hum of conversation, this place feels right. Pints of Stella Artois and glasses of local Chardonnay grace the table. Glancing at the long leather banquette that lines one wall, you understand why Magnolia attracts a handful of patrons on an early Thursday evening dining alone with a book and a glass of wine.

The service is efficient and the servers are very knowledgeable, in a pull up a chair and enjoy type of way. Well-informed about the menu and the southern influences of the food, they guide you towards house specialties like the shrimp etouffe and grilled tuna, which is helpful because the menu has many tempting choices.

To continue with the southern influence, a warm basket of jalapeno hush-puppies comes to the table with a nice accompaniment of herb butter. They are sweet and spicy at the same time, a perfect thing to share for a table of four. The portions at Magnolia are quite big, so bring your appetite or stick with some of the lighter selections including some of the larger appetizer portions and the salads.

The salads include a nice country salad with goat cheese and bacon, the trendy "wedge" of iceburg with tomato, red onion and fresh blue cheese and simple field greens salad. All of the salads are fairly priced in the area of $7.

The warm appetizers are lots of fun and include crab and lobster fritters with a savory remoulade, a mini lobster roll and a nice portion of steamed mussels. Eating at Magnolia is almost a communal affair, and as we debated our many choices, diners from a nearby table leaned over and let us in on some of their favorites, because it is just that kind of place.

Entrees, which are incredibly generous, ranging from $15 to $30 and are a good value. Try some of the fish specialties, like the pecan-crusted halibut or Magnolia's take on a southern bouillabaisse with shrimp, littleneck clams and mussels served with wild rice waffles.

There is also a nice selection of meats replete with favorites like a grilled ribeye that is served with a roasted shallot bordelaise and grilled baby back ribs, down to a deluxe hamburger plate as a nice simple staple.

There is also a yummy selection of sides at the price of $5 each. Baked macaroni and cheese, sautéed escarole and good old-fashioned "creeeamy" mashed potatoes.

Wines by the bottle are heavy on the California selections and a strong representation of Australian whites. By the glass they offer local Wolffer selections, as well as a BV Chardonnay and Mondavi Coastal Cabernet. Bottled wine begin at $25.

For dessert we sampled the luscious Grand Marnier infused crème brulee which was the perfect sweetness to accompany a great espresso and cappuccino.

Magnolia is open six nights a week for dinner. Call them at 631-725-0101.

The Best Thing You Can Do With A Blender

Bow down to the blender, for without its miraculous whirrings and churnings the world would be a far more desperate place to inhabit. Bear in mind the great man who made the frozen margarita possible, the brilliant bandleader, Fred Osius, who approached Waring in 1937 with a dream. He envisioned the ultimate mixer and after a few months pursuing this dream and a meager $25,000 investment the world received one of the greatest gifts the human mind has ever conceived.

Well, perhaps that's a bit overstated. But if you pause to consider the blender, and its bastard offspring – the food processor – you will realize the benefits and enjoyment a blender and its relatives can bring. Sauces in a snap, no more slicing and dicing for hours and the satisfying whir of a milkshake in progress. And, of course, one of the greatest creations that a blender can create – the fruit smoothie.

Do not confuse the fruit smoothie with a Slurpee, a slushie or any other frozen/blended concoction – they are poor pretenders to the crown of fruit smoothiehood. There are so many reasons that fruit smoothies are where it's at that I won't even try and enumerate them here for the sake of space conservation. However, for argument's sake and to quiet the naysayers in the audience, I will mention that the smoothie tastes amazing and can be tailored to suit any palate, it is good for you, fun to make and the perfect accompaniment poolside.

Just covering the basics: you'll need fruit, preferably frozen in bite-size chunks, some different types of juice, orange and apple are good versatile options, some yogurt, sherbet, soy or milk and a little ice is good, too. With the above you're going to have everything you need to make great smoothies. One of the best approaches to smoothie making is experimentation, however, knowing the basic principles is helpful.

Frozen fruit is the heart and soul of the smoothie. You can buy frozen fruit or you can freeze it on your own. Wash and peel the fruits that you like, cut them into chunks, stick them in a plastic bag and throw them in the freezer. If you have fresh fruit, which is also great, add a little ice when blending to get the temperature down. With the base in place in the blender you can add some fruit juice or milk to lighten up the mix or yogurt to make the final results have a tangy little twist. When using milk you can use a tablespoon of frozen juice concentrate to boost the flavor. Simple and super good; below are some classics. (Any weekend afternoon, add a few shots of rum to the following.)

Bonanza O' Berry

1 cup apple juice
1-1/2 cups lemonade
1 cup frozen raspberries
1/2 cup frozen strawberries
1 cup raspberry sherbet

Pour the apple juice and lemonade into the blender. Add in the frozen fruit. Cover and blend on a medium setting and finish blending at a higher setting until the concoction is a smooth liquid. (Hence "smoothie.")

Bluenana

1/2 cup nonfat milk
1/2 cup vanilla yogurt
1 frozen banana
1-1/2 cups frozen blueberries

Pour the milk and yogurt into the blender. Add in the frozen fruit. Cover and blend on a medium setting and finish blending at a higher setting until the concoction is a smooth liquid.

Hawaiian Heaven

1 cup passion fruit nectar
1 cup guava nectar
1 cup orange sherbet
4 tablespoons coconut milk
1/2 frozen banana
1/2 frozen mango (optional)

Pour the guava and coconut milk into the blender. Add in the frozen fruit. Cover and blend on a medium setting and finish blending at a higher setting until the concoction is a smooth liquid. – J.M.

Dining in The Hamptons

Side Dish

By Aji Jones

There's a new player coming to the East End restaurant scene, and it sounds like a hot ticket. Chef/ Owner John Donnelly, along with his wife Gina Donnelly, and Sag Harbor residents Lou and Kerri Dollinger have launched a new restaurant at the site of the former Mill Creek Inn. The new Oasis waterfront restaurant & bar on Noyac Road in Sag Harbor (631-725-7110) opened for business on May 15. The eatery features modern American cuisine with an emphasis on seafood. In the words of co-owner Gina Donnelly, the restaurant has a "modern beach club" appeal – warm, tropical ambiance accented by rattan furniture, potted palms and a stunning view of Noyac Harbor. Highlights of the menu include Donnelly's signature East End Bouillabaisse, and a grilled pork chop with cherry-rhubarb chutney. Sounds great!

There's another new arrival on the restaurant circuit, though this one comes in a small bundle of joy. Dede from East Hampton's Peconic Coast recently gave birth to a beautiful baby boy named David "Bull" Ford Pedersen. Future pro wrestler? Maybe! The Dish is positively ecstatic for the happy new family, and wishes them all the best! Speaking of Peconic Coast, check out their great menu-wide prix fixes, including a bar special of any two appetizers for only $16. Head over there for a drink and a snack, and give Dede a hug and a congrats. Tell her the Dish sent ya.

Ocean's Grillfish and Steak in Napeague had a great opening last week. They're kicking off the early season with a prix fixe of their own, consisting of three courses for just $19.95. It's available all night Sunday through Thursday, and from 4:30 until 6 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Great seafood, and a great price: you can't beat it.

More news on the prix fixe front: Bobby Van's in Bridgehampton is offering a three—course prix fixe for only $25. And don't miss their Steak Night, where you can have a steak and French fries for only $16. Perfect for celebrating the end of that spring diet.

For all of you Mexican food lovers out there, there's good news in Amagansett. La Fondita has reopened for the season, serving up their delicious tacos and burritos for prices you can't beat in the Hamptons, or anywhere else, for that matter (except maybe Mexico itself).

There's a newcomer making a name for himself after a successful first season. Chef Mazzu Santos, a graduate of the Cordon Bleu culinary academy in France, has released his lineup for the 2002 season. It includes such savories as filet of beef, veal scaloppini, canard au orange and rabbit with mushrooms. Of course, he will also tailor to the client's needs and desires, no matter how eclectic. Give Mazzu's Catering a call at 726-2044.

The champagne will be flowing at The Hamptons Auto Classic on Memorial Day Weekend – after all, Champagne Mumm is a lead sponsor of the event. The food alone should be worth a visit, too: Art of Eating is the caterer, and they'll be operating "The Pit Stop Café" all weekend along. And after you fill up with great food and drink, you might as well check out the cars, too: Saturday there will be a great classic car auction and Sunday you can see the "Concours d'Elegance," a juried show of beautiful, privately owned classic automobiles. Honorary Chief Judge is Alec Baldwin and proceeds go to Alec's mom's charity, the Carol M. Baldwin Breast Cancer Research Fund. For tickets call 537-1868.

The Dish's secret celebrity radar:

After a recent East End photo shoot for Coach Leatherwear top male model of the moment Tyson Ballou joined his colleagues for a late night dinner at the Plaza Café in Southampton. Evidently Tyson loves seafood as much as the Dish, because he dined on the Thai prawn salad and swordfish. Maybe its time for the Dish to pursue a modeling career.

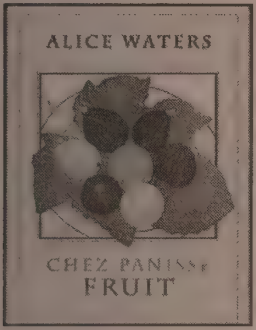
Booked: A Title For Every Taste



Common cookbooks in Hamptons kitchens may bring to mind titles from the Barefoot Contessa, The Silver Palate and Martha Stewart, but to stop there would be silly, because domesticity and entertaining are some of the most important and diverse activities available in the Hamptons. And with people throwing so many types of functions this summer it is fun to know that there are new cookbooks to aid you in becoming the master entertainer that you strive to be.

Classic titles from the Barefoot Contessa are still great standbys and include the March, 2001 release of The Barefoot Contessa Cookbook: Ideas and Recipes for Easy Parties that are Really Fun! This title has recipes that use relatively few ingredients and are good for groups. If you are looking for a something to bring as a housewarming gift or a weekend offering this book is one advocated by many foodies as the defacto food and entertainment guide for the Hamptons.

Also from the Barefoot Contessa is their original cookbook The Barefoot Contessa Cookbook: Secrets from the East Hampton Specialty Food Store, For Simple Food and Party Platters You Can Make at Home. This book is full of grilled items and salads great for a large dinner party or a quite Sunday dinner at home.

This season, for the design savvy gastronomes John Pawson has released his first cookbook after being heralded for years as an architectural genius in the school of minimalism. Pawson teams up here with Annie Bell, a food writer for British Vogue, to produce the aesthetically appealing Living and Eating. The photos are stunning in this beautifully designed book, featuring Pawson's stark kitchen and simple tableware.

The Babbo Cookbook, was released in April of this year and features some of the most popular recipes from the one of the hottest restaurants in New York City. These recipes are presented in a way that is manageable for the home chef and perfect to woo your guests at your next dinner party.

Alice Waters, the culinary goddess of the West Coast has released Chez Panisse Fruits which has lots of new recipes that are both sweet and savory, perfect for utilizing all the summer East End fresh produce.

And speaking of domestic goddesses, Nigella Lawson of the popular show Nigella Bites! has released two cookbooks this year: one aptly named How to Be a Domestic Goddess and the other simply, How to Eat. Both feature her fun and sloppy recipes, great for a party or a rainy day at home.

Also this summer look for a new book by Ruth Reichl, the editor of Gourmet Magazine entitled Endless Feasts: Sixty Years of Writing for Gourmet. This book is full of tidbits and menu insights.

Get to the book store soon and get ready to entertain this season. There are lots of parties to be had and evenings to pass with good friends and good food.

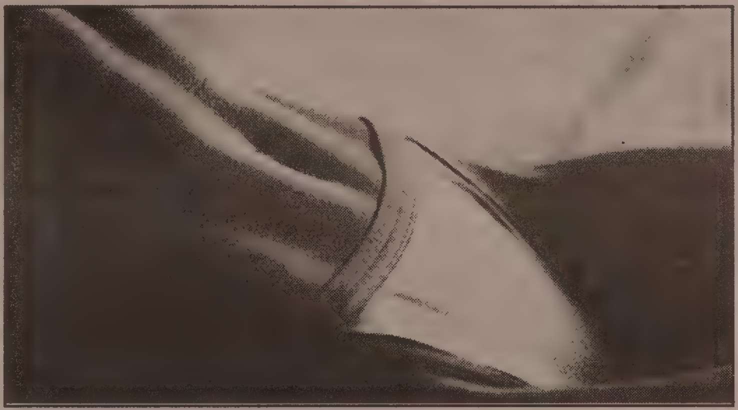
HEALTH & BEAUTY

Abs-olutely Fabulous

Before approaching the beach in anything less than a turtleneck, many people take their winter "insulation," especially the belly, into consideration. Many feel the need to invest in products with clever names such as Torso Track or AbSlide. These contraptions are expensive, show little results and eventually end up under the bed covered in a thick layer of dust. There are many ways to tone abdominal muscles without pricey inventions or even going to the gym.



When concentrating on your abs it is important to be aware of its different regions. There is the upper abdomen, which is the area above belly button and the lower abdomen. The rectus abdominus is the long, flat muscle that extends the length of the abdomen. The internal and external oblique muscles extend down the side of the abdomen, at an angle. Different exercises focus on the different areas of the abdominal region. Each time you do any abdominal exercises, use two different types that focus on two different regions.

The most common abdominal exercise is the stomach crunch. Stomach crunches isolate the lower and upper abdominal muscles. Use the lower abs to pull your hips off the floor, and raise your shoulders and head with your upper ab muscles. Move your shoulders in the direction of your hips, enforcing the "crunching."

To work only the lower abs, reverse crunches are effective. Lay on your back and raise your legs so your feet are directly above your abs. Begin the exercise in this position, lower your legs to the floor without touching the ground, and raise them again.

"The Great Wall" isolates the upper abdominal region. Stand straight and concentrate on the abdominal region. Tense the muscles as much as you can and hold for six seconds. Relax and immediately tense them again.

The bicycle maneuver stimulates the rectus abdominus. To do this, lay on your back with your hands beside your head and your knees bent at a forty-five degree angle. Slowly, begin to move your legs in a pedaling motion. As you do this, touch you left elbow to your right knee and vice versa.

An exercise ball is a good piece of equipment to use for oblique muscles. Sit on the ball with your feet flat on the floor. Let the ball roll back slowly and lay back until your thighs and torso are parallel to the floor. Contract your abdominal muscles by raising your torso to no more than forty-five degrees. For extra strengthening, make the exercise less stable by moving your feet closer together. An exercise ball runs around $20-$30.

When doing exercises to strengthen abdominal muscles, remember to concentrate on the correct muscles. It's often easy to let more powerful muscles, such as those in the legs and hips, do the work for you. Pay attention to any back pains. If your neck begins to hurt, it's okay to put your hands behind your head for support, as long as you're not pulling your head up. Begin your work-out with a six-week program. During the first two weeks, do abdominal exercises twice a week and move up to three times a week for the last four weeks of the program.

The most common mistake made with abdominal exercises is the assumption that they will contribute to weight loss. Abdominal exercises simply tone the muscle under the fat. To burn fat, it's necessary to participate in aerobic exercise to speed up metabolism. Besides adding exercise, it's necessary to change your diet. Add more protein to your diet and cut down on carbohydrates. Once you make these changes to your diet and exercise routine, you can comfortably trade your turtleneck in for a tankini.

SUMMER NAILS, DESIGN YOUR OWN TATTOOS AND STINKY SCENTS

With the warm breezes of spring and summer right around the bend, toes are going to be wiggling out of hiding. It's time to get them in top shape now and getting a weekly pedicure at your favorite salon can do just that in no time. You can do it yourself at home just as easily but finding the time to gather all your implements in one swoop, picking out nail polishes and just creating a mess is enough to deter the best intentions. Nevertheless, there are those who would prefer to go at it on their own.

Everyone knows the basics by now of a good pedicure/manicure, that is if you've been reading this column. You need a nail pusher or orange wood stick, a cuticle softener, a pumice stone of some sort for the calluses, a good footsoap soak, a nipper or cuticle trimmer for removing dead skin around the nails and of course your favorite base coat (to prevent nail staining and increase the life span of your color). A good nail enamel is a must as is a top coat to give it a final shine and seal.

If you have olive/yellow skin tones, peaches are great to go with. And with pink skin, of course, pink/reds are your colors. But, lets face it, we all get tan and what goes with that? A French manicure looks super on summer toes. It gives a real clean finished look to your toes. I like the super whites, and tend to shy away from the ones with the pink cast to it. In fact, you don't need to even put on the milky color if you want it striking. Just use the real white across the tip of your nail and get a nice shiny top coat like Cover Girl Nail Slicks to top it off.

Make your nails look like a French tied bouquet with a different color on each toe! Stick with pastels, metallic, or primary colors. Also, there are so many different little decals you can paste on your nails. White nails with a plain fine strip of gold or silver across the nail is so neat looking. For a good selection, visit your local beauty supply. With a little practice your nails can look as professional as what your manicurist can do. Check out the department stores for fun shades of summer!

Have you ever wanted to get a tattoo and for many reasons you hesitate? Those being, a permanent name stuck on your arm or ankle long after you've broken up and the painful procedure of having it removed? The colors are bleeding and your skin is sagging and so are those adorable little hearts going around your arm? You should begin to consider getting a custom-made temporary tattoo. Created by Hollywood makeup artist and tattoo prosthetics expert, Christien Tinsley. Tinsley Transfers offers a fun, unique way of showing the world your own personal style without the full commitment of a permanent ink tattoo. Tattoos last approximately 3-4 days with normal showering. Designs are submitted via fax or email. A one-time formatting charge of $50 per design applies, then the tattoos are printed out on a 8 1/2 x 11 sheets, which cost $45 per sheet or on 8 1/2 x 14 sheets for $55 per sheet. The number of tattoos per sheet depends on the size of your design. You can choose a tiny flower for you fingers or toes, or a ring of them for your arm or neck. Anything you can come up with, they can print for your summer fun! Tattoos are available by visiting their website at www.tinsleytransfers.com or by calling/faxing 818-559-6479.

Maria, our Luxuries editor, and I were speaking on the joys of going out for brunch and having parents toting their darlings along to provide noise for the entire establishment. How annoying is that? We then came up with another pet peeve you come across in restaurants and other places that are hard to escape from at the moment and that is someone drowning themselves in perfume. Why is it that some people think they have to absolutely swim in it for the world to get a whiff? When it is a cheap scent you get double the agony. I went into a women's boutique this weekend, not naming names and the place literally reeked from some overpowering scent that invoked an immediate headache. I had to stand outside after a few minutes while my friend shopped. They must have sprayed and had some sort of potpourri floating around at the same time. It is not necessary for these scents to dominate the air you breathe. So ladies... next time you are about to apply your perfume or cologne, think of where you'll be wearing it. If you are going to be in a closed area, please choose something light and airy. Maybe just a little body lotion of the same scent as a base and a light spray in the air and you walk quickly through it kind of thing. If you are going to be outdoors... think of what you'll be attracting... bees and other insects. Especially if you wear a floral undertone cologne. Choose your fragrance wisely and considerately. Thank you!

Beyond Organics: Creating Balance In Your Garden

You'll find that nothing succeeds like success. As soon as you start letting a few simple non-toxic techniques go to work against the insects, other steps fall right in line and insect problems dwindle. Without toxic poisons permeating your air, soil, water and plants, some of nature's intended protection has a chance to catch its balance. Helpful insects can get back on the job. Plants themselves respond to the advantages of a balanced environment, develop stronger systems and regain the inherent resistance to insects of plant life. Even birds come back on the garden scene to lend a hand and an appetite.

The first step in learning to distinguish the predator insects from injurious insects is to redefine the term "Pest." Contrary to the chemical industry's unenlightened philosophy that the "only good bug, is a dead bug," which creates a pesticide market through fear, most crawling things, are simply just that: crawling things, which do no one harm. Indeed, many are extremely useful to mankind. So the first step in studying the insects in your garden is to realize that, a garden should not be devoid of insects. If you are to achieve successful biological control in your garden, it must be filled with insects. And some of these insects should be so-called pest insects. In fact, what the chemical industry labels as pests are, in reality, a valuable food source for the beneficial insects that need food, just as the injurious insects do, only their food is not plants but insects. It is necessary to have low populations of some of the less destructive minor past insects in the garden, to serve as food for beneficial insects. So, don't panic if you detect several injurious insects; this does not mean that your garden is in danger; it may even be a sign that your garden is strong and healthy.

Another thing to remember is that there is much insect activity in your garden that you don't even realize they are at work, until you begin to find empty insect eggs that have been sucked dry, or that have turned black sometimes with an exit hole. The Trichogramma Wasp is a good case in point; they are almost microscopic, barely visible to the eye. Yet they often achieve a high degree of control in all sorts of moth eggs. In many cases, they may be effective that you don't even realize they are present.

Crop rotation: "A crop growing close to the ground for the chief purpose of protecting the soil from erosion and also for the improvement of its fertility, between periods of regular production of the main crops."

Note: Planting clover before seeding corn cuts down on grubs. Repeated alfalfa cover crops gradually reduce wireworms and other legumes minimize soil nematodes. Plant feeding habits also calls for attention. Heavy feeders, like lettuce, corn, cabbage, tomatoes, cauliflower, broccoli and squash should go into rich, organic

Graduation 2002: Help Set Up The Grad Pad

It's all over. Four years of college (five for those dedicated students who really enjoyed school) are finished and a new generation is cast into the world to make their mark, make a difference, find jobs and find places to live. It's the time when the dorm-aesthetic is replaced by a new desire to find an apartment and furnish it in an ever so slightly more mature manner than the beanbag-WWF-poster-dirty-clothes-pile that marked college living. The biggest problem in the pursuit of this end is a lack of funds, which relates directly to the find-a-job part of post-collegiate existence. But this is where Mom and Dad, Grandma and Grandpa and Aunt Lilly can help. Not only does graduation give them the opportunity to pawn off their old furniture that they've grown bored with, but they can also get the grad a practical and useful graduation gift.

Keeping the graduate's interests in mind, it should first be pointed out that Aunt Lilly's old couch may not be at the top of the new grad's wish list. There are a lot of things that grads are hoping for and furnishing their apartment may not be a priority right away. For instance, after graduation many students opt to go travel for awhile, so perhaps a plane ticket and a backpack would be more appreciated than 200-count Egyptian cotton sheets. Also, books, though always well intentioned are not the best idea – students have just spent sixteen years with books and more of them at this point can be daunting. Checks are always a good idea, the bigger the better. Cash is quicker.

If the grad is going to be moving into an apartment, they will undoubtedly need a few things. There is a sharp division, however, between what they'll need and what they'll want. The following items lean towards the latter rather than the former. They're items that will get a lot of use and they'll be welcomed by the new nester. Plus, some of them are so cool that the grad won't mind taking Aunt Lilly's old couch.

One of the most important features of the new pad is the ability to entertain in style. The kegs of Bud Light and piles of plastic cups are a thing of the past – the new grad is a sophisticated individual so post-college is martini time. A vintage martini set, complete with two martini glasses and stainless steel cocktail shaker ($60) will both impress and look good on the counter (any new-grad apartment is unlikely to have ample cabinet space). A wine rack is another nice idea and it can add a touch of sophistication and class to what will probably be an apartment that lacks both sophistication and class.

Another important feature of the first apartment is the entertainment system. This does not mean a thirteen-inch, black and white television with a coat hanger antenna like the parents of said graduate had in their first apartment. The home entertainment system of today is a highly evolved pile of electronics that you just have to have. Fortunately, prices are not completely absurd. The TV is the centerpiece and add to this a JVC DVD/CD player ($170), which, as its name suggests, plays DVDs and CDs and is HDTV compatible. For a one time, low price you can pick up the Sony HT-5100 home theater ($700), which comes with DVD/CD player, receiver, and five speakers.

Among the other must-haves for the new pad are a Panasonic TC-170s cordless phone ($50) with built in caller ID so that the new grad will know before picking up that it is their future employer calling to set up an interview. Cutlery by Henckels ($250) is another nice option and will look great next to the martini set. And the new grad will never run out of things to do with the knives when you pick up a copy of The Joy of Cooking ($30), which has been an old standby for more than twenty years now.

These are just a few of the things that the new grad is going to need. After a few trips to the furniture store Aunt Lilly's couch will be looking good, sheets, any sheets, even ones with a low thread count will be welcomed, even some plates and a couple bowls will be something to get excited about. But that's weeks away, for right now, think big, be a touch impractical and remember, this is the end of many years of school work, so keep it fun.

Just a quick rehash: 1) Cash 2) Check 3) Plane ticket 4) Any of the above items and, in descending order, anything and everything that is practical. –J.M.

Organics

soil. Plants that compete with each other for root space and light, as well as food, should be kept apart.

Companion planting is one of the most interesting weapons against injurious insects, a surprisingly effective one. Beans and potatoes make good garden mates, beans dispelling Colorado potato beetles while the potatoes protect against Mexican bean beetles. Other combinations include soybeans planted near corn against chinch bugs and Japanese beetles, tomatoes near asparagus against the asparagus beetle. Plants that repel insects can serve the organic grower in remarkable ways. Insects simply don't swarm, or nibble on strong/smelling, strong/tasting leaves.

Added up, these methods of controlling injurious insects are an effective, expanding arsenal of safe, workable ways to keep insects to a minimum and maintain the inter-relationship of soil, plants and insects. It's creating a balance in your garden.

Clean Machine

Spring is the perfect time to get winter's road grime off your vehicle. The spring cleaning bug should also bite you around this time to motivate you into getting it ready for beautiful summer days. I recently bought a new Chevy Impala – no, no, not the kind your dad or even grandfather drove. I want to keep the shine looking as showroom as possible, so I did a little investigating.

Regular washings and waxings will help maintain a car's appearance. This is great for a resale, not that the Impala is going anywhere anytime soon. But Armor All Products estimates "a clean car can add up to $1,000 to the resale value of a car. If you lease your vehicle, you also want it to be in good shape, in order to avoid any charges at lease end for excess wear and tear."

Be vigilant, a car's paint finish starts to degrade the minute it leaves the showroom. Dirt and dust make your vehicle look dirty, but that's just the start of the problem. There also are acid rain particles and other pollution to guard against. If you let these items build up and remain on your car, they can bond to or etch into the paint finish, causing damage. Eventually, this can even destroy the finish. Bird droppings and tree sap are other offenders. Make a practice of getting these off your car as quickly as possible. Most folks now know nearly all new vehicles have something called "clear coat" that's supposed to help paint look beautiful for years. But clear isn't a supernatural protectant. It can scratch, develop swirl marks and become hazy. Only let the pros handle the rubbing compounds and harsh chemicals on your car. When washing your car, only use cleaning products formulated for vehicle finishes. Dish washing liquid is not a good choice. After repeated uses, it could leave the finish dry and result in nasty oxidation that makes the paint look dull and faded.

When you are ready to wash the car, make sure the metal is cool to the touch. You should park in the shade and let the sheet metal of your car's body become cool before starting. Hot or warm metal is apt to develop unsightly water marks during washing.

Work from the top down when washing your car. Never allow the soap to dry on it. Rinse each section as you go along. When you dry the car, you want to use only 100% cotton terry cloth material or a high-quality chamois that is clean. You don't want to be rubbing contaminants and dirt back onto the clean finish.

When you've washed your entire vehicle, it's time to give special attention to the non-sheet-metal parts. Wheels, tires, windshields, etc. are obviously made of different materials and should be cleaned using products developed for each. Follow the directions carefully and try to apply these cleaning products only on the parts of the car for which they are suited.

Estimates on how often to clean your vehicle range from every week to every other week. It also depends on where you travel, dusty areas, industrial zones, whether your vehicle is garaged or left on the street and frankly, how dirty your vehicle gets. One thing is certain: the more often you clean it, the less arduous a chore it is each time, since there's less dirt and pollution build up. Now, when no one is looking, I'll hang my dice on the rear view mirror!

EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

I hope all mothers, grandmothers, great grandmothers and future mothers had a wonderful Mothers Day. The other day while I was driving to a meeting in Southold, the dj on WRCN Radio was spouting supposed facts such as if a full time mom was paid for all she does it would add up to $500,000.00 per year salary. Moms are dieticians, chefs, limo drivers, nurses, lawyers, politicians, landscapers, painters, interior designers and on and on. I know that my mom and my better half do many of those things, so I agree that we simply couldn't live without the work moms do. I hope all the mothers at least had a nice day, perhaps even a nice dinner out!

Last week, Carolyn McAllister, LIFB Public Relations Director, Becky Wiseman, LIFB Associate Director and myself traveled to Washington, D.C. for the American Farm Bureau National Affairs Conference. The trip was an opportunity to get a briefing on all of the Farm Bureau priority issues and to do some follow-up Hill visits. LIFB representatives had been down in the capitol a month earlier for lobbying the Farm Bill, especially the Farmland Protection Program funding. This trip was more about thanking our Senators and Congressmen and women for their continued support of our issues. I cannot say enough good things about our U.S. Senators from New York and the Long Island Congressional delegation. They have worked hard to ensure our farmers get some programs that may help them, as most state and federal programs don't apply to Long Island.

President Bush signs $190 billion farm bill on May 13

We did spend some time on the Hill speaking to staffers and members of Congress on some other issues such as Farm Bureau's effort to permanently eliminate death taxes. Individuals, family partnerships and family corporations own 99% of U.S. farms. Death taxes destroy family owned businesses when the tax, which can be as high as 55% forces surviving family members to sell farmland, buildings or equipment to generate enough cash to pay the tax. When farms and ranches disappear, rural communities also suffer. Valuable farmland in areas like ours is often lost to development when death taxes force farm families out of business.

Estate planning is sometimes effective in protecting farm businesses from over burdensome taxes. But attorneys, accountants and insurance policies are costly and take funds that could be better used in the farm operation. Because businesses evolve and grow farmers can never be sure their business will survive to the next generation. Annual death taxes make up less than 2% of total federal tax receipts. In recent surveys, seven out of ten Americans support elimination of the death tax. Congress repealed death taxes last year. The problem is that the law sunsets in 2011 and then it's back into play. It's nearly impossible to plan estates when the repeal in not permanent. While we were in Washington last week, we had heard rumors that a deal had been struck to address a permanent elimination of the death tax. That would be a good thing to help our farm families here on Long Island and across the country. We'll see if it comes to pass!

Joseph Gergela III is the Executive Director of Long Island Farm Bureau.

POLICE BLOTTER

Two tickets to paradise eventually transformed into two tickets to the slammer for a pair of half-siblings from East Hampton. The man, age 20, and his half sister, 18, had robbed a safe at the Paradise Café in Sag Harbor last fall. Both Sag Harbor and East Hampton Town Police collaborated on an investigation and eventually pinpointed the two as definite suspects. They were arrested and charged with third-degree burglary on Thursday, May 2.

If you're shopping at the Bridgehampton Commons any time soon, be sure keep tabs on your wallet. Since the end of April many reports have been filed regarding stolen purses and wallets. On April 29 alone, four complainants, one at Kmart and three at King Kullen, reported to police the theft of their credit cards, identification and cash. The investigations continue.

We sane folk sure hope this next guy gets the book thrown at him. A 22-year-old from Remsenburg punched his wife, who was 8 months pregnant at the time, in the stomach after she removed her wedding ring to go to bed. He was arrested by Southampton Town Police last Saturday at his Club Lane home and charged with third degree assault.

Nothin' like spending an evening with the boys at the Flanders Men's Club, just don't hang out in the woods. Two men, one 73 of Bay Shore, the other 42 of Riverside, were arrested for trespassing after police found them sitting in the woods in their car last Saturday night.

During an eight-day period in April, video surveillance cameras at the Montauk Manor Resort in Montauk recorded some interesting footage involving an unknown couple. It seems the two had keys to the resort's indoor pool and, under the cover of night, they would enter the facility and take a dip. After the realization that the two had been doing this, the resort changed the locks to the pool. The next night the couple returned to the pool area and was confronted by an employee at which time the two trespassers laughed and left the grounds. As they drove away, the employee was able to record the license plate number. As of press time, this case is still under investigation by East Hampton Town Police.

It wasn't a bench warrant that called police to Main Street in East Hampton, but it was a bench that warranted police presence early last Sunday morning. It appeared that some devilish youths decided to move a park bench into the middle of the road. The bench was returned to its rightful position by responding officers.

A driver for Federal Express mail services ended up FedExing himself to the emergency room last week after a Water Mill resident's dog bit his thumb and left quite an impression. The owner of the dog told police that his was out of the ordinary for his best friend, no charges were filed.

The first public stoning since 1680 occurred in East Hampton last Wednesday as a Kings Road resident was driving down Hog's Creek Road. He told police that several youths threw rocks at his car, damaging the paint and windshield, but fled before he could get descriptions.

Twice last summer, I personally experienced the wrath of situations like this next one. A dark and devious criminal reached deep into my personal space before wrenching the beating heart from within the very epicenter of my soul. They took my fishing gear! A Virginia native phoned police in Montauk last Saturday after he discovered that someone had removed the reels from the fishing rods that were locked on top of his truck. Employees of the Albatros East, where the man's truck was parked, were unable to give police any information as no one had witnessed the theft. Don't worry my Virginian friend, the thieves that hit you where it counts will pay with years of bad fishing karma.

Dan's LETTERS

HOW DO YOU SPELL HAMPTONS? D-A-N...

Dear Dan,

As a homeowner in East Hampton for over twenty years, we have become loyal and devoted readers of Dan's Papers. Dan's Papers has, rightfully, become the most informative newspaper in the East End and a synonym word to Hampton. We wish you continued success.

We also applaud you personally for enriching the community's life on the East End with your many community activities. Our young son still treasures the "Kite" that won smallest kite prize in early 1980's.

THE MIGRATORY HABITS OF GIANT GOLDFISH

Dear Dan,

I read your article in last week's issue concerning the catch of a giant goldfish in 1978 with a great sense of relief and fascination.

The prior year 1977, found me visiting Nouakchott, the capital of The Islamic Republic of Mauritania, having a drink at the house of ill-repute attached to the Hotel Marhaba. I was chatting with the proprietress, an Eskimo from Northern Canada who spoke fluent German (my college major) which was fortunate as her English was non-existent (it was the only place in this Muslim country, and God knows, you couldn't eat the food). She told me of a giant "golden" fish found on a long line put out by local fishermen that was twice the size of their boat… "The greatest fish ever seen in West Africa."

At that time, I assumed that: A) my German had gone to hell in a hand basket; B) the truly dreadful booze was causing delirium, or C) the sandstorm raging outside had finally taken its toll.

Thank you for restoring my faith in my sanity.

Donald J. Stewart
East Patchogue

Many people who helped land that goldfish in 1978 still suffer from chronic fatigue today. –D.R.

GIRLS GONE WILD

Dear Dan,

The East Hampton Ladies'Village Improvement Society will host a luncheon and fashion show on Friday, June 7, at noon at Pacific East in Amagansett. Spring and summer resort wear from Mark Fore & Strike will be featured, as will vintage clothing from the L.V.I.S. Bargain Box.

The event is being arranged by village Fair Co-chairs Jane Hersch and Jola Marcario and proceeds will help to defray the cost of the annual fair. L.V.I.S. hats, aprons and tote bags will be sold, fair chances will be available and there will be a drawing for a Raymond Weil watch, courtesy of London Jewelers.

Betty Pasteur is in charge of fashions and Felicia Hogan will coordinate luncheon plans. Ticket information can be obtained by calling 324-1220.

HUNG OUT TO DRY

Dear Dan,

In its never-ending pursuit of higher property values and human dignity, the Southampton Town Board (STB) has just passed a law prohibiting people from hanging out their was to dry in their front yards. As reported in Dan's Papers, the word front is explicit.

If this is so, the new law is an exercise in futility. Doesn't the STB know that nobody ever hangs out their wash in their front yards? They hang their wash in their back yards. Even people who live in poorer areas don't hang their wash in their front yards.

Of course, this new law is not aimed at movie stars or other affluent people who live in zillion dollar homes in the Hamptons. They don't hang out their wash, in any case. No, it is aimed at poorer people who live in homes worth a million or less, who may want to save a few pennies on electricity.

So, here we see a new kind of discrimination aimed at the poor. An unfortunate result of this new law might be that people would be arrested in the streets for wearing clothes that have obviously been clandestinely dried out of doors. Such clothing does have that fresh sun and wind dried look that so many people favor.

The STB must have wracked its brains to come up with this one. I herewith present them with a few ideas they can use in their search for new areas of lawmaking.

People could be forbidden: blowing their noses, scratching themselves or mopping their brows on a hot day, in public. These things are so undignified and remind us of our humanity. I have many such suggestions but I don't want to give them away all at once.

I guess it takes an artist to appreciate a colorful clothesline, which has been a time-honored motif in the world of art. One work that immediately comes to mind is John Sloan's "Greenwich Village Backyards." Please note that people hung their was in their back yards even in the Lower East Side.

Women washing, ironing or carrying laundry inspired great artists like Daumier, Degas and Van Gogh. What was good enough for them is good enough for me.

I think this law should be either repealed or amended. As it is, it has no bite. Knowing how resourceful human beings can be, the law should include not just back yards, but patios, porches, sundecks or any other area where wet laundry can be hung. Such a new law will end all confusion and discussion, and the number or arrests and ensuing lawsuits. People in the Hamptons will then be able to talk about other things.

Vincent Torre
Mattituck

Exhibitionists would dry their clothes in the front yard, and what's wrong with that? –D.R.
